PREFACE.

CHRYSOSTOM'S famous treatise on the Priesthood, though several times edited abroad, has been only once separately edited in this country. It is now nearly two hundred years since the appearance of that edition. Like the present, it was published at Cambridge, and printed at the Cambridge University Press.

The main object of the present edition is determined by the guiding principles of the series of Patristic texts of which it forms a part. It is primarily intended to meet the requirements of Theological Students: and to such students, even if we interpret the phrase in the widest sense, the present treatise may be said to be of peculiar interest. It has been well described as a work 'full of counsels and warnings which the clergy of every age may study with advantage': and previous editors (Bengel and Seltmann, for example) have also aimed at adapting their commentaries to the needs of candidates for Holy Orders.

In the second place, it may be pointed out that the de sacerdotio forms, by its subject-matter, its treatment, and attractive style, a fitting introduction to the study of the Fathers; and some of those who, without having any previous acquaintance with this branch of study, chance to take up the present volume, may thereby be induced to extend their knowledge of Patristic writings.

In preparing this edition, which has occupied the scanty leisure of the past three years, I have received much assistance from various sources. To Dr Mason, the editor of the series in which the book appears, I am indebted for constant help of the most practical kind, and for continued encouragement at every stage of the work. The Managers of the Hort Fund, by their generous grant made in 1904, facilitated my researches among the manuscripts of the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. M. Henri Omont extended to me (as to so many others) the utmost courtesy and kindness while I was at work in that library. Mr Vincent Benson, Scholar of New College, Oxford, collated for me in full both the New College and the Corpus Christi College manuscripts of the de sacerdotio. The Rev. T. Allen Moxon rendered valuable assistance in the correction of the proofs, and also in the compilation of the indices, a task which naturally involved considerable labour. For help of various kinds I am also indebted to the following: the Archbishop of Sinai, Dr Bigg, Mr E. W. Brooks, Dr A. E. Cowley, Mrs Gibson, Dr Kenyon, Prof. J. E. B. Mayor, my colleague Mr C. W. Mitchell, Dr Swete, M. l'Abbé Toiton, and the librarians at Berlin, Munich, the Vatican, Vienna, and other libraries on the Continent. To each and all of those who have assisted me in a first and no doubt imperfect essay in the domain of Theology, I hereby express my hearty thanks.

INTRODUCTION.

§ I. ON THE CHARACTER, DATE, AND GENUINENESS OF THE DE SACERDOTIO.

JOHN, surnamed Chrysostom, that is 'golden-mouthed,' from the splendour of his eloquence, was born at Antioch about 345 A.D. He was baptised about the year 368, certainly before 370: and became an ἀναγράστης, or reader of the Scriptures, at the same time. In 374 or 375 he went to the mountains near Antioch, where he spent several years as a hermit. In 380 he returned to Antioch: and in the Church of Antioch he served as deacon from 381 to 386, and as presbyter from 386 to 398. In 398 he became Bishop of Constantinople. In 404 he was exiled from that city, and he died in exile in the year 407¹.

The occasion which eventually led to the composition of the de sacerdotio is described at considerable length in the opening chapters of this treatise: and a brief statement will suffice here². Chrysostom had been on the point of entering upon the monastic life in company with his intimate friend Basil, when he learnt that he and Basil had been chosen for consecration as bishops, though they were not yet even deacons. Chrysostom's deep sense of the weight and responsibility of the priestly office, and of his own unworthiness, made him shrink from the idea of ordination. On the other hand, he considered that Basil was eminently fitted for the duties of a bishop: and he resolved that the Church should not lose the services of his friend¹.

² Compare the account in DCB, article 'Chrysostom.'

When therefore Basil proposed that they should act in concert, and should together either accept or reject the proffered honour, Chrysostom pretended to acquiesce, while at the same time resolving to take separate action. Thus, when the time of consecration arrived, Basil was seized and brought before the bishops: and was duly consecrated, in spite of his reluctance. Chrysostom had meanwhile concealed himself, and was nowhere to be found. Basil, who at the time of his consecration had been assured that Chrysostom had already submitted to be consecrated, soon discovered the deception which his friend had practised. He visited Chrysostom in the hermit's cell where the latter had apparently taken refuge. As he struggled with his emotion, Chrysostom burst into laughter, and expressed his pleasure at the success of his plot: but being reproached by Basil in language of great dignity and gentleness, he proceeded to defend and to explain his past conduct.

The defence, briefly put, is to the effect that the end justifies the means. Though it is difficult to read this part of the treatise (i 1 to ii 6) without being repelled by the duplicity which Chrysostom had shewn,—or, if the account is partly imaginary, was willing to be thought to have shewn,—it must not be forgotten that several of the Fathers take a view different from our own on the subject of 'pious fraud,' and that what Chrysostom carried out in practice had been advocated long before his time¹. He takes, however, much surer ground, when, in explanation of his conduct, he enlarges upon the heavy responsibilities of the episcopal office, combined with his own unfitness, as the cause of his desertion of Basil (ii 7 to vi 13). In these eloquent and moving descriptions of the dignity of the priesthood lies the main interest of the present work: it is these which have given it its title περὶ ἱερωσύνης, and which make it of permanent value to the clergy of every age.

The date when the events above described took place is probably 373²; a year or so before Chrysostom left Antioch, and entered upon that life of monastic retirement which, as we have seen, lasted until 380.

The date of the composition of the de sacerdotio is a quite distinct question: and from ancient times different opinions have been held on this subject. Some have assigned the work to Chrysostom's diaconate (381—386), others to an earlier period, that which he passed in retirement (374—380). It can, I think, be shewn that neither view is correct, but that the work was written after 386.

The evidence may be arranged thus:

I. External Evidence

(a) hitherto available, and (b) first used in the present edition.

II. Internal evidence of the de sacerdotio.

I (a) Socrates³, the Church historian (fifth century), and George of Alexandria⁴ (seventh century), tell us that ¹ See note on i 5 (εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἀλ κτλ.) with regard to the question of οἰκονομία, as Chrysostom calls such deceit.

² This is the date thought most probable by Bardenhewer *Patrologie*² p. 283, Preuschen in Hauck-Herzog L.c., and Venables in DCB i 520. Montfaucon places the date somewhere between 372 and 375 (see his Monitum prefixed to the de sac.). ³ H.E. vi 3.

⁴ In his life of Chrysostom: see Savile's edition of Chrysostom viii 176.

Chrysostom composed the de sacerdotio during his diaconate. On the other hand, Symeon Metaphrastes¹ (tenth century) assigns the work to the earlier period 374—380.

(b) Chrysostom himself, in a sermon² preached at Antioch, the genuineness of which is beyond question, refers to a work on the priesthood which he intends to publish at a future date. This work cannot be other than the treatise περὶ ἱερωσύνης which we possess. For not only is there no evidence that Chrysostom wrote more than one work on this subject, but the context of the passage in the sermon in question shews close similarity with the topics handled in the de sacerdotio, as the following analysis of the passage will prove. Chrysostom is speaking of the audacity of King Uzziah, who ‘transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense,’ and is led to speak of the office of the priest as greater than that of the king: *ἱερωσύνη γάρ καὶ αὐτῆς τῆς βασιλείας σεμνοτέρα, καὶ μείζων ἐστὶν ἀρχής*³. The throne of the priesthood is set up not on earth, like that of the king, but in heaven: *τίς ταῦτά φησιν; αὐτὸς ὁ τῶν οὐρανῶν βασιλεὺς· ὅσα γὰρ ἀν δήσητε, φησιν, ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἔσται δεδεμένα ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· καὶ ὅσα ἀν λύσητε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἔσται λελυμένα ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς*⁴. Again, ὁ δεσπότης (i.e. God) ἔπειται τῷ δούλῳ (i.e. the priest), *καὶ ἄπερ ἀν οὗτος κάτω κρίνῃ, ταῦτα ἐκεῖνος ἄνω κυροῦ*⁵. Then he adds ἀλλὰ περὶ μὲν ἱερω-

² in illud vidi dominum v (one of the six Homm. in Oziam) 132 C—133 A. The reference, but not the conclusion based on it, is due to Bengel (Leo-Bengel p. xviii). ³ Cp. de sac. iii 1 (notes).

⁴ Cp. de sac. iii 5, where the same passage of St Matthew (xviii 18) is quoted.

σύνης, καὶ ὅσον τῆς ἀξίας τὸ μέγεθος, ἐν ἑτέρῳ καιρῷ δηλώσομεν. Now the de sacerdotio (see footnotes) contains a comparison between the priestly and the kingly offices, in favour of that of the priest: it contains the same quotation from St Matthew's Gospel, used for the same purpose: and it contains the same remarkable expression that God 'confirms' above (in heaven) what the priest does, or decides, below (on earth). There seems to be no room for doubt that the treatise on the priesthood promised in the words περὶ ιερωσύνης...ἐν ἑτέρῳ καιρῷ δηλώσομεν is the treatise which we possess.

II. The evidence afforded by the de sacerdotio itself supports the conclusion that it belongs not to the time of monastic retirement, but to a later period in Chrysostom's life. The maturity of thought and sobriety of tone which appear in this work, as contrasted with the characteristics of writings of undoubtedly early date, are proof that it marks a later development of Chrysostom's mind and outlook upon the world. This is particularly noticeable in what he says of the ascetic life of the monk¹. Towards monasticism Chrysostom adopts in the de sacerdotio a critical, not to say an antagonistic attitude, which does not harmonize with the view that he was himself a monk when he wrote this work, but is entirely consistent with the view that at the time of writing it he had already abandoned the ascetic life and had been ordained for the ordinary service of the Church.

Thus external and internal evidence combine to shew that the de sacerdotio is later than the time of his retirement (374—380). It is also later than his diaconate (381—386). For at Antioch, as we know from Chrysostom himself, preaching was not part of the duty of a deacon: but was confined to the bishop and the 'wiser of the presbyters'.¹ Hence the sermon in question is certainly later than Chrysostom's ordination as presbyter. Bardenhewer² places it in 386. Tillemont³ and Montfaucon⁴ incline to place it later still, in 388.

Thus 386 is the terminus post quem for the date of the de sacerdotio. The terminus ante quem is afforded by Jerome, who, in a work written in 392, refers to the de sacerdotio as already known to him⁵. And we must apparently place the terminus ante quem earlier than 392 in order to allow the reputation of the book time to reach Jerome. Hence we infer that the de sacerdotio was written between the years 386 and 390.

The date of the work cannot perhaps be fixed with greater precision on the evidence now available. But if we may have recourse to a priori considerations, we shall incline to place the date at the beginning rather than at the end of this period (386—390). For the beginning of Chrysostom's priesthood was the natural and fitting moment for him to publish a work in which the high claims of the priesthood are so strongly emphasized, and its prerogatives so glowingly described. Again, this was also a natural moment for him to set forth to the world the true motives of his action at the time of Basil's consecration. His own conduct on that occasion had—as we may infer from the de sacerdotio itself—been misrepresented: and he may very possibly have felt that now, when he had been called to the higher office of priest, it was desirable to strengthen his work and power for good by refuting the aspersions to which he had been exposed.

The conclusion, therefore, to which we are led by all the evidence before us is that the de sacerdotio was published shortly after 386, and most probably in the year 387.

The scene of the dialogue is laid at Antioch, the birthplace of Chrysostom, and, as seems probable, of Basil also.

The contents of the six books into which the treatise is divided are, in the main, as follows :

BOOK I describes the events (already recounted) which preceded Basil's consecration : also his visit to Chrysostom, and Chrysostom's defence against his friend's reproaches.

BOOK II describes the heavy responsibilities of the priestly office : and shews that while Basil is fitted for that office, Chrysostom is unworthy of holding it. Those who nominated him, instead of resenting his refusal of the honour, may congratulate themselves that he did not bring discredit upon them by accepting it and then proving his unfitness.

BOOK III sets forth the dignity of the priestly office, and the faults of Chrysostom's character, which would have entailed disaster to him and others. The qualities for which we ought to look in a bishop, and his various duties, are also described.

BOOK IV shews that the priest, or bishop, must be a stalwart defender of the faith against heretics : and contains an eloquent eulogy of St Paul in regard to his skill in expounding Christian doctrine.

BOOK V emphasizes the need of careful preparation before preaching.

BOOK VI describes the duties of the priest as contrasted with those of the monk. The responsibilities of the priest are shewn to be greater, for the souls of others are in his keeping. The fierce character of the warfare carried on by Satan against mankind is also delineated. The book ends with a promise given by Chrysostom that he will assist Basil by his counsel in fulfilling the duties of his office.

It is not always easy to distinguish the various stages of Chrysostom's argument, which is somewhat desultory and is at times interrupted by digressions. He occasionally returns to a subject which he seemed to have fully discussed already. Thus the Eucharist is twice described in much the same terms¹; the same may be said of the contrast between the priest and the monk², and the faults of Chrysostom's character³.

The genuineness of the de sacerdotio is attested by quotations made from it by the following authors:

(1) George of Alexandria (seventh century) quotes the passage in which Anthusa entreats her son not to leave her⁴. The citation is somewhat free, but presupposes a text substantially as we now have it.

(2) Suidas (tenth century) singles out the de sacerdotio for praise on account of its admirable style and its lofty eloquence⁵. He also quotes from it two passages of considerable length⁶.

(3) 'Anonymus Scriptor vitae Chrysostomi' (after 950) quotes the passage which is cited by George of Alexandria¹.

We also find references to the treatise in the following:

(4) St Jerome, writing in 392, tells us that he had read this work of Chrysostom. He knew Chrysostom by reputation as a prolific author².

(5) Isidore of Pelusium (fifth century), a disciple of Chrysostom, says that his master wrought this treatise to such a pitch of perfection that all who read it saw, reflected therein, their own virtues or failings³.

(6) Socrates, the Church historian (fifth century) states, as we have seen, that Chrysostom wrote the de sacerdotio during his diaconate.

§ 2. ON SOME POINTS IN THE TEACHING OF CHRYSSOSTOM WHICH ARE ILLUSTRATED BY THE DE SACERDOTIO.

(a) The dignity of the priestly office.

Chrysostom's deep sense of the dignity and importance of the office of priest pervades the whole of the de sacerdotio. We know that such views were characteristic of the Syrian Church: but they find in Chrysostom perhaps their most eloquent and convinced exponent. Yet he lays stress, not only on the dignity of the office, but also on its responsibilities. As Bishop Gore has well said¹: 'Chrysostom is emphatic in asserting that orthodoxy is of no avail to justify a Christian body unless its priesthood is secured by proper ordination. But if he thus shews himself to be alive to the spiritual dignity of the priesthood, in virtue alike of its sacrificial and of its judicial powers, he is equally alive to its responsibility for individual souls, laying immense stress on the necessity for considerateness, for gentle and patient self-adaptation to the different characters and needs and weaknesses of men, whether of high or low estate.'

(b) The Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist.

None of the Fathers takes a more exalted view of this Sacrament than Chrysostom. At the moment, he tells us, when the bread and wine are consecrated, the heavens open and the angels come down to earth : and he quotes with approval a report that angels had actually been seen within the sanctuary at the time that the Eucharistic sacrifice was being offered. The greatest purity, he argues, is therefore required of those who participate in that service, while the priest who celebrates far surpasses in dignity, by virtue of that fact, the High Priest of the old covenant².

² de sac. iii 4. It ought, however, to be remembered that ceremonial is not all in all to Chrysostom. He thinks more of the spiritual inwardness of the priestly office: thus we are reminded in reading him of the words of Dr Moberly in regard to the priesthood: 'the formal celebration of the Eucharist may be the very highest of its administrative methods...yet priesthood itself is something more vitally inclusive than any mystery of formal executive privilege': Ministerial Priesthood p. 186.

With regard to Chrysostom's doctrine of the Eucharist, there has been much discussion as to whether certain passages in the de sacerdotio favour, or do not favour, the doctrine of Transubstantiation. Thus, for example, he says to each of those present at the Eucharist: 'thou seest thy Lord sacrificed, and lying (before thee), and the priest standing over the sacrifice and praying, and all (around) reddened with His precious Blood....He that sits above with the Father is at the same time held in our hands, and suffers Himself to be held and clasped by all who wish!'

Chrysostom taught that there was complete identity of the consecrated elements with the Body and Blood of Christ. But this language, alike in the passage just quoted and elsewhere, fails to support the doctrine of Transubstantiation, which tries to explain on the basis of mediaeval scholasticism the manner whereby the bread and wine became, upon consecration, the Body and Blood of our Lord. 'When the Fathers asserted,' says Pusey, 'that what is consecrated, and what we receive, are the Body and Blood of Christ, they mean this not in any physical or carnal way, but spiritually, sacramentally, Divinely, mystically, ineffably, through the operation of the Word of Christ and of God the Holy Ghost. But in this meaning they do speak of the objective presence of the Body and Blood of Christ as following upon the consecration².'

The Roman controversialists who cite this passage of Chrysostom, among others, in support of Transubstantiation have been effectively answered by Cosin, Bishop of Durham from 1660 to 1672. 'We deny not,' he says, 'that some things emphatical and even hyperbolical have been said of the Sacrament by Chrysostom, and some others: and that those things may easily lead unwary men into error. That was the ancient fathers' care, as it is ours still, to instruct the people not to look barely on the outward elements, but in them to eye with their minds the Body and Blood of Christ, and with their hearts lift up to feed on that heavenly meat: for all the benefit of a Sacrament is lost if we look no farther than the elements. Hence it is that those holy men, the better to teach this lesson to their hearers, and move their hearts more efficaciously, spake of the signs as if they had been the thing signified, and, like orators, said many things which will not bear a literal sense, nor a strict examen¹. And Cosin cites the passage quoted above from the de sacerdotio as an example of such rhetorical expressions on the subject of the Sacrament.

I am indebted to the kindness of Dr Mason for an illuminating discussion of the actual wording of the passage in question (iii 4). Dr Mason takes, for example, the use of the word φοινισκομένους. This, he thinks, probably refers to being sprinkled with the blood, not as I have explained it ad loc. But at any rate it does not refer to the colour left upon the lips of the people by the Eucharistic species. It is, he remarks, in the same region as the word 'blood,' not in the region of the word 'wine': and is therefore not intended literally. The upholder of Transubstantiation would not say that the 'blood' of Christ literally 'reddens' those who receive. Then if one word in the passage is metaphorical, it is at least possible to suppose that others also are, e.g. τεθυμένον καὶ κείμενον, περιπτύξασθαι καὶ περιλαβεῖν. Finally, Dr Mason points out that Chrysostom's glowing metaphors do not necessarily go any further than (for instance) Wesley's

‘With joy unspeakable we feel
The Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven:
The altar streams with sacred blood,
And all the temple flames with God¹:’

or George Herbert's

‘At Communion-times, he is in a great confusion, as being not only to receive God, but to break and administer Him².’

‘Neither Herbert nor Wesley held the theory of Transubstantiation; and they had no fear (even after that theory had been formulated) of their words being understood to suppose it.’ Their object was to impress, not to define.

(c) Penitence, Confession, and Absolution.

Penitence, as a system of discipline, had its origin and sanction in the New Testament: and primarily in the promise of Christ to which Chrysostom, as we have seen, makes reference more than once. Several passages in the de sacerdotio recognize the need of penitence: but Chrysostom also insists that the priest must study the varying characters of men in order that his discipline may be effective³.

¹ Hymns on the Lord's Supper lxxxix; probably suggested by this passage of Chrysostom and its application of the story of Elijah.

³ de sac. ii 4 (notes) and vi 4 πουκίλον αὐτὸν εἶναι δεῖ κτλ. On Penance see Schwane Dogmengeschichte (Rom. Cath.) vol. ii p. 826, and Batiffol Études d'histoire et de théologie positive 1902.

In regard to confession, Chrysostom taught that it might be made either mediately, to the priest, or immediately to God. Confession to the priest is implied in the *de sacerdotio*¹, confession to God is alluded to in other writings: for example, the de incomprehensibili Dei natura, where he says, ‘I do not bring you before an audience of your fellow-servants, nor do I compel you to reveal your sins to men. Unfold your conscience in the presence of God, shew Him your wounds, and seek relief from Him².’ Thus Chrysostom is not so strong an advocate of auricular Confession as e.g. Cyprian, Basil, or Gregory of Nyssa.

The power of absolution was entrusted to the Church by our Lord. Chrysostom refers to it when, after quoting the words in which Christ conferred the power of the keys, he adds, ‘that which the priests do (have done) below (i.e. on earth), God ratifies above (i.e. in heaven): and the Master confirms the decision of His servants³.’ The absolution in the de sac. consists (in the case of the unbaptized) in admitting to Baptism: or (in the case of baptized persons who have undergone penance) in readmitting them to Communion.

(d) Persecution of heretics.

Chrysostom held that heretics ought not to be persecuted on account of their beliefs, but should by gentle measures be brought, if possible, to the true faith. This view is expressed by him not only in the present treatise¹, but also elsewhere². It is somewhat at variance with the practice which he occasionally adopted of employing imperial decrees for the coercion of heretics and pagans³.

² de incomprehensibili D. n. v 490 οὐδὲ γὰρ εἰς θέατρόν σε ἄγω τῶν συνδούλων τὸν σῶν, οὐδὲ ἐκκαλύψαι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἀναγκάζω τὰ ἀμαρτήματα· τὸ συνεῖδος ἀνάπτυξον ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ αὐτῷ δεῖξον τὰ τραύματα, καὶ παρ’ αὐτοῦ τὰ φέρμακα αἴτησαι.

(e) The office of the Bishop.

From the de sacerdotio we may derive considerable information with regard to the office of bishop in the fourth century.

Some care is, however, required to distinguish between passages which refer to the bishop, and those which refer to the priest; the same word ἱερεύς being commonly employed to denote both⁴. In the following analysis I proceed according to the order in which the topics discussed appear in the article 'Bishop' in the Dictionary of Christian Antiquities.

i. Title. Besides ἱερεύς we find ὁ προστάτης⁵, ὁ ἐπίσκοπος⁶, ὁ πατήρ⁷; besides periphrases such as ὁ τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν λαχών⁸.

ii. Electors. We hear much of those who elected Chrysostom and Basil to the office which Chrysostom declined to fill. The electors, who are described sometimes as 'the fathers¹' sometimes as those 'who select' or 'who raise to honour²', consisted probably of the metropolitan and the comprovincial bishops, in whom the choice was vested by the Council of Laodicea in 365. This Council, by denying the laity a voice in this matter, took the first step towards the ultimate practical extinction of really popular elections.

iii. Conditions of eligibility. (a) Status. It was laid down by the tenth canon of the Council of Sardica (343) that no one should become a bishop per saltum, but should previously go through the several offices of reader, deacon, and priest. At the time when it was proposed to make Chrysostom a bishop he was merely a reader (ἀναγνώστης). A similar exceptional case is mentioned by St Augustine (Ep. cxlii). Instances of deacons being made bishops are more common.

(β) Age. The Council of Neo-Caesarea (314) insisted that no one should be appointed bishop until he was at least 30 years of age. Special merits, however, and the precedent of Timothy, repeatedly set aside this rule in practice. Chrysostom, even if we put the year of his birth as early as 344, was not more than 29 at the time of the proposed consecration (373).

iv. Ordainers. Chrysostom seems to speak of Basil being consecrated by one bishop only³. Inasmuch, however, as the rule in the East and elsewhere required consecration by not less than three bishops, we may suppose that the one bishop mentioned in this connexion is the metropolitan : with him, in all probability, were associated some of the comprovincial bishops.

v. Place of Ordination. The consecration of Basil took place in Antioch¹. From this we may infer that Basil's see lay within the province which had as its metropolitan the Bishop of Antioch : for at this time the metropolitan see of a province was usually the place of ordination of bishops whose sees fell within that province. This has a bearing on the question which is discussed in § 5 as to the identity of the Basil of the de sacerdotio.

vi. Removal by resignation. Chrysostom argues in favour of voluntary resignation of his see by any bishop who is conscious of serious guilt². Examples of resignation are not wanting: for example, Gregory of Nazianzus, when archbishop of Constantinople, voluntarily resigned with the consent of the Council of Constantinople: so also Meletius, when Bishop of Sebaste in Armenia. At the same time the feeling of the Church ran strongly against resignation, as being tantamount to giving up work for Christ³.

vii. Removal by deposition. This is contemplated as an alternative to voluntary resignation in the passage just quoted from the de sacerdotio. The grounds on which deposition is based in this passage seem to be those general irregularities which affected all clergy, and therefore inclusively bishops also: we may note that the 58th Apostolic Canon deposes for negligence in pastoral care. The special offences for which bishops, as such, might be deposed from their office do not seem to be in question¹.

¹ The home of Basil was (at this time, at least) in Antioch: and the bishop came thither for the ordination (cp. ἐλθόντος in the previous note).

viii. The duties of a bishop. Those which call for notice in connexion with the de sacerdotio are the duty of preaching, the administration of discipline, the management of Church property, Church patronage, arbitration of lawsuits, and protection of the widows and virgins of the Church. The references given will enable Chrysostom's statements on these various subjects to be studied in detail. I will sum up these statements briefly.

(α) The bishop, according to Chrysostom, ought, if possible, to be a good preacher²: and whether he be so or not, he must take pains with the preparation of his sermons. The high standard which he sets, and which he followed in his own practice both at Antioch (as presbyter) and at Constantinople, is in accordance with the duty of teaching, upon which he lays so much stress³.

(β) In the administration of discipline the bishop took the lead, the presbyters holding a subordinate place under him, and forming his Council. The bishop, however, was the chief and ordinarily the sole judge in the first instance in cases of excommunication: and this is borne out by the *de sacerdotio*⁴, apart from a mass of other evidence.

(γ) The income and offerings of the Church, and its alms, were in the first instance under the disposition of the bishop, to be dispensed either by himself or by his proper officers: with, however, the general sanction of his presbyters. But the Council of Antioch (A.D. 341) forbids the bishop to deal with Church revenues without the consent of the presbyters or deacons: and orders him to render an account of those revenues to the provincial synod. Chrysostom dwells upon the necessity of taking precautions against a possible charge of misappropriation of the funds of the Church: and his own later experience illustrates the importance of the advice¹.

(δ) The right of Church patronage was vested in the bishop. He, as a rule, collated to the benefices within his diocese, conferring, by ordination to a particular 'title,' the spiritual jurisdiction which drew with it the temporal endowments.

In filling up the various ecclesiastical offices which fell vacant the bishop was assisted by the body of presbyters acting collectively. According to Chrysostom the appointments to these offices were made at the 'public festivals': and often caused acute dissension between the bishop and the presbyters².

(ε) The bishop became a judge or arbitrator in secular causes between Christians: but only by the consent of both parties, and by an authority voluntarily conceded to him. This judicial authority, which attached to the bishop as a matter of Christian feeling, became gradually an authority recognized and enlarged by State law. Chrysostom tells us that it imposed a heavy burden upon the bishop, and exposed him to unpopularity with disappointed claimants³.

³ de sac. iii 18 (notes).

(ξ) The office of protecting all that were distressed and helpless was assigned to bishops. Among these were included widows, virgins, minors, orphans, prisoners. Chrysostom describes at length the difficulties and anxieties entailed by the protection of widows¹ and virgins² in particular.

(η) Finally, various other details of the bishop's duties may be briefly alluded to: thus he was expected to shew hospitality to strangers. The virtue of hospitality is strongly inculcated in the New Testament, and was practised most liberally by the early Christians. Presbyters, and afterwards bishops, were specially expected to excel in this respect. Thus Chrysostom praises Flavian, bishop of Antioch, for keeping open house for the benefit of strangers and travellers, whom he entertained so generously that it might be doubted whether his house was the travellers' home instead of the bishop's³.

The bishop was also expected to visit not only the sick, but also those who merely desired to gratify their own self-importance by entertaining him. The description of the ordeal which he often had to face in such houses is vivid, and not without a touch of humour. Every trifling action on his part is carefully scrutinized: men scan his countenance, striving to read his thoughts: the very 'quality of his laugh' does not escape notice, and if he bestows too genial a smile upon anyone it is likely to provoke resentment in someone else⁴.

Nowhere, probably, have the responsibilities of the Episcopal office been more fully set forth than in the present treatise: yet no one, on the other hand, has described with greater eloquence than Chrysostom the privileges of that office, and the opportunities for good afforded to him who holds it.

§ 3. OTHER ANCIENT TREATISES ON PASTORAL THEOLOGY¹.

The de sacerdotio may be considered the most celebrated treatise, at least of those written in ancient times, on the subject of the priestly office and priestly duties. But Chrysostom is by no means alone in dealing with this subject. ‘The majority of the Fathers,’ as Dr Swete has said, ‘were not only writers and preachers, but diligent and experienced guides of souls².’ Thus Cyprian, Ambrose, Basil, Theodoret all have contributed to that body of Pastoralia which has, in recent years especially, done much to stimulate and encourage the pastoral activities of men placed in the midst of a civilisation very different from that for which those Fathers wrote.

The set treatises, nevertheless, on the pastoral life are not numerous. The most noteworthy are the de fuga of Gregory of Nazianzus, the de officiis ministrorum of St Ambrose, St Jerome’s letter to Nepotianus, the regula pastoralis of Gregory the Great, and the de moribus et officio episcoporum of St Bernard.

I. The second oration of Gregory of Nazianzus, named de fuga from the fact that it was written to explain his reasons for voluntarily withdrawing from the priesthood (in 362), though he afterwards returned to his duties, has long been regarded as closely akin to the de sacerdotio: for Gregory takes the opportunity of describing the importance and the responsibilities of the priestly office from the same point of view as that which we find in Chrysostom. An examination of the de sacerdotio and the de fuga side by side shews many close parallels and resemblances both of subject-matter and of phraseology which can scarcely be entirely due to accident. Thus the topic of voluntary retirement¹ is handled in both of these works in the same way: in both we find a list of the chief heresies² prevailing in the fourth century: in both the suggestion that ill-regulated violence against any given heresy may drive us into a heresy of opposite tendency³: in both a long and elaborate encomium upon the character and work of St Paul⁴.

The de fuga dates from 362; and the de sacerdotio (as we have seen) is about a quarter of a century later. The question of an indebtedness of the later to the earlier work cannot, perhaps, be definitely decided: but it seems at any rate probable that Chrysostom was acquainted with the *de fuga*⁵. He probably knew of and sympathized with the action of Gregory of Nazianzus in resigning his see in 381, a few years before the de sacerdotio was written: and, if so, this sympathy may have turned his thoughts towards the work in which Gregory had defended in theory the action which in 362 he did not finally carry out, but which he did effectually carry out by his resignation in 381.

⁵ Migne (xxxv 406) asserts that both the de sacerdotio and the regula pastoralis (see below) are a mere expansion of the de fuga.

2. The de officiis ministrorum of St Ambrose, in three books (date about 391), is a manual of Christian ethics which derives great importance from the noble character, wide experience, and statesmanlike views of its author. The form of the treatise is suggested by Cicero's de officiis, to which it presents an interesting and instructive contrast.

Resemblances to Chrysostom have been detected in a work de dignitate sacerdotali, attributed to St Ambrose¹. This work, however, is spurious and of late date.

3. St Jerome's letter to Nepotianus (Ep. lii: date 394) contains an interesting discussion of the duties of the presbyters and monks of that time.

4. The regula (or cura) *pastoralis*² of Gregory the Great (Bishop of Rome 590 to 604) was written by him for the instruction of his clergy, and is of special interest to Englishmen because King Alfred thought so highly of it that he himself translated it for the use of the English clergy of his time. The original work, which at one time was given to every bishop at his consecration, resembles the de sacerdotio in the emphasis which it lays upon the necessity of the study of individual temperaments by the priest, and the value of a knowledge of human nature³.

5. St Bernard of Clairvaux, who died 1153, wrote a work entitled de moribus et officio episcoporum, which he addressed to Henry, Archbishop of Sens. The de consideratione also presents many points of resemblance to the work of Chrysostom.

³ See notes on de sac. ii 4.

§ 4. THE STYLE OF THE *DE SACERDOTIO*¹.

The treatise is cast in the form of a dialogue (on the model of those of Plato) between Chrysostom and Basil : but Chrysostom has by far the larger share allotted to him, and in the later books Basil is for the most part a mere listener.

The style of the de sacerdotio is highly elaborated, and bears clear traces of the care which Chrysostom took with its composition. Its long and often complicated periods are constructed on the basis of the rules of Greek rhetoric. One sentence may be cited at length in illustration of this : καθάπερ γὰρ οἱ σωμάτων ἐρῶντες, ἔως μὲν ἀν πλησίον εἰναι τῶν ἐρωμένων ἐξῆ, χαλεπωτέραν τοῦ πάθους τὴν βάσανον ἔχουσιν, ὅταν δὲ ὡς πορφρώτατῳ τῶν ποθουμένων ἑαυτοὺς ἀπαγάγωσι, καὶ τὴν μανίαν ἀπήλασαν· οὕτω καὶ τοῖς ταύτης ἐπιθυμοῦσι τῆς ἀρχῆς, ὅταν μὲν πλησίον αὐτῆς γένωνται, ἀφόρητον γίγνεται τὸ κακὸν, ὅταν δὲ ἀπελπίσωσι, καὶ τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν μετὰ τῆς προσδοκίας ἔσβεσαν². In this sentence we have as careful a use of παρίσωσις and παρομοίωσις as in Isocrates himself.

Other traces of the influence of the rhetorical training of Chrysostom upon his writings may be seen in the repetition of words for the sake of emphasis, and in the use of two almost synonymous words to express a single idea³.

¹ In this and the next section I am largely indebted to a dissertation 'de Joannis Chrysostomi dialogo qui inscribitur περὶ ἱερωσύνης' by A. Cognet : Paris, 1900.

² de sac. iii 11 (quoted by Cognet I.c. p. 75). Libanius, his teacher, confessed that Chrysostom would have deserved to succeed him as head of his school of rhetoric had he not been stolen away by the Christians : Gibbon ch. xxxii.

³ See note on μάτην καὶ εἰκῆ i 2.

The frequent use of similes and metaphors is characteristic of the Syrian school: and no one employs them more frequently than Chrysostom¹.

The vocabulary of the de sacerdotio contains, as befits the elevation of the subject and style, certain words which are more frequent in poetry than in prose². Here again we are reminded of Plato.

The treatise contains several references, which are here collected, to classical authors.

(a) Homer is once alluded to³ (but not by name): and once a phrase is borrowed from him⁴. In a third passage it is possible that Chrysostom imitates a Homeric simile⁵.

(b) Sophocles may possibly be referred to in one passage⁶: but this is uncertain.

(c) Euripides almost certainly suggests to Chrysostom a sentiment on the subject of invalids⁷.

(d) Aristophanes seems to be imitated in one passage⁸. There is some reason to believe that Chrysostom was fond of reading Aristophanes⁹, who probably attracted him by his vivacity, exuberance, and literary sense, however great the difference between them in other respects.

(e) Isocrates, Demosthenes, Thucydides, and Plato are mentioned by name in one passage¹ as being, each in his own way, masters of prose style.

(f) Vergil seems to be echoed in one passage², probably unconsciously.

§ 5. THE IDENTITY OF THE BASIL OF THE DE SACERDOTIO.

The following historical personages have been identified with the Basil of the dialogue. I put first the view which seems to me most probable.

(1) The Basil who became Bishop of Raphanea, a town in Syria not far from Antioch. This suits the conclusion of the dialogue where Chrysostom promises to visit his friend from time to time. In this there would be no difficulty if one was at Antioch, the other at Raphanea. We find a Basil bishop of Raphanea present at the Synod of Constantinople in 381, eight years after the probable date of the consecration of the Basil of the de sacerdotio.

This is the view which seems to have gained general acceptance. It is adopted, for instance, by Fronto Ducaeus, Baronius, Tillemont, Montfaucon, Bardenhewer.

² iv 6 τις γὰρ τόπος τῆς οἰκουμένης...τοῦ δικαίου τοὺς ἄθλους ἡγυνθῆσεν; cp. Verg. Aen. i. 459.

(2) Basil the Great, bishop of Caesarea in Cappadocia. This view is thought to gain support from a passage in the historian Socrates: but Socrates' words, rightly considered, merely prove that Chrysostom was intimate with Basil of Caesarea: they have no reference to the de sacerdotio. The great Basil, who was born in 331 (according to others in 327), was at least 13 years older than Chrysostom, and therefore could scarcely have been (as the Basil of the dialogue certainly was) Chrysostom's fellowstudent. Moreover the consecration of Basil as bishop of Caesarea would naturally take place at Caesarea, not at Antioch; and if, as seems certain, the de sacerdotio was written after 380, it would scarcely have been possible for Chrysostom to exclude all reference to Basil's noteworthy episcopate at Caesarea (370–379) had the Basil of the dialogue and Basil the Great been identical.

(3) Basil, bishop of Seleucia, who took a leading part in the Council of Constantinople (held 448), in which Eutyches was condemned. This view was held by Photius¹, who comments on the similarity which he discerned between the writings of Chrysostom and those of Basil of Seleucia. But this Basil, who was alive in 458, cannot possibly have been in his youth a comrade of Chrysostom, who was much senior to him.

(4) Maximus, bishop of Mopsuestia, who was according to Socrates induced by Chrysostom to abandon a career of worldly ambition. No reason, however, has been given for the change of name from Maximus to Basilius. It is clear from the dialogue itself that the circumstances in which Chrysostom deceived his friend were widely known and had been freely canvassed: and the change of name would have been quite purposeless. The distance between Antioch and Mopsuestia (in Cilicia) is another argument against this view, which has indeed nothing to recommend it.

(5) It has also been held that the character, and therefore the name, of Basil is a pure figment of Chrysostom's imagination. It is surely beyond question that the episode on which the de sacerdotio is based is an historical one, not merely invented: and so it has been taken by an overwhelming majority of those who have written on the subject.

§ 6. HISTORY OF THE TEXT¹.

I. List of the most important Editions.

I. The de sacerdotio was printed separately long before the appearance of the first complete edition of the works of Chrysostom in the original Greek. In 1525 the editio princeps of the *de sac.*² was issued from the printing press of Froeben, at Basle. It contained the Greek text, with a prefatory letter addressed by Erasmus to Wilibald Pirkheimer, the learned humanist of Nürnberg, and the host, friend, and adviser of almost all the scholars of Germany¹.

The text of this edition is admirable from a typographical point of view. It has, however, no critical value.

2. The next edition is equally void of critical importance. In 1529 the publisher Rutgers Rescius brought out, at Louvain, a text of the de sacerdotio, of which the editor was Nicolas Clenard².

3. In the two editions just named no mention is made of the manuscripts on which the text is based. In 1599 a step in advance was made, when David Hoeschel published an edition of the *de sacerdotio*³ based on the readings of certain specified manuscripts: viz. the Palatinus (in the Palatine library at Heidelberg), the Augustanus (in the library at Augsburg), the Coloniensis (at Cologne), and others of less importance. Hoeschel regarded the Palatinus and the Augustanus as especially valuable: the former of these seems to have disappeared, a fate which will not appear remarkable to those who remember the vicissitudes of the Palatine library in the Thirty Years' war. The Augustanus is now in the Hof- und Staatsbibliothek at Munich.

Hoeschel's preface is addressed to 'Albertus a Steten, Reipublicae August. Consul,' and from it we learn the principles by which the editor was guided in the formation of his text. He states that he made a careful collation of the Palatinus and Augustanus, removing their errors, filling up their *lacunae*¹, and appending an apparatus criticus which he had compiled from the readings of these manuscripts.

There is no copy of Hoeschel's edition in the British Museum; and I have been unable to obtain one from any other source. However, through the kindness of my friend Mr Vincent Benson, scholar of New College, Oxford, I have secured a transcript of the most important of the critical notes, and I am satisfied that nothing of importance has escaped his attention and acumen.

The chief value of Hoeschel's edition lies not in the text, which seems to contain little to justify the somewhat confident statement on the title-page (see previous page, footnote 3), but in the marginal readings, derived from the manuscripts above mentioned. It should, however, be added that many of these marginalia are of little or no value, and that Hoeschel seems to have made no attempt to estimate the relative importance of his two best manuscripts.

4. After Hoeschel no separate edition of the de sacerdotio appeared for more than a century. But in 1610, eleven years after the publication of Hoeschel's book, there appeared the first volume of the great edition in Greek of the complete works of Chrysostom by Sir Henry Savile². This work has justly earned for Savile a reputation as one of the most eminent Greek scholars that this country has produced ; and in many respects it exhibits a scientific conception of the duties of an editor which it would be difficult to parallel until quite recent times. Savile spared neither labour nor expense to make his edition perfect. He gave occupation to a whole army of scribes, whom he engaged to copy the manuscripts of Chrysostom in the various libraries of Europe. He was assisted by many eminent scholars: e.g. Jacques de Thou, Andreas Schottus, Isaac Casaubon, Janus Gruter, David Hoeschel: and the influence of James I, whose interest in theological studies is well known, was exerted to enlist the active co-operation of foreign princes and English ambassadors on behalf of Savile's enterprise. Every precaution was taken by both editor and printer—John Norton, the king's printer—to ensure accuracy. The preparation of the edition is said to have cost Savile £8000: and, as a result, this sumptuous undertaking has been called by Hallam, not unreasonably, the first work of learning on a great scale published in England¹.

Savile tells us that as the basis of his own text of the de sacerdotio he used that of Hoeschel: but had corrected it with the aid of two manuscripts at Oxford, one in the library of Corpus Christi College, the other in that of New College. The amount of new material that he utilized in the case of this treatise was thus comparatively small: but his extensive knowledge of patristic Greek, and his sound judgment, helped him no less in the de sacerdotio than in other portions of his edition. His text is one of the most trustworthy that has appeared: and I have never differed from him without hesitation.

At the end of the eighth and concluding volume of Savile's edition there are Latin notes, both critical and explanatory, on the de sac. They are by the editor and certain of his English friends—John Boys, Canon of Ely, Richard Montagu, and others.

5. While in England the edition just described was being passed through the press, the French Jesuit Fronto Ducaeus (Fronton du Duc) was engaged in Paris on a similar task. His edition¹, which included a Latin translation of the Greek original, was left unfinished at Fronto's early death: but was completed in six volumes by Federicus and Claudius Morellus. In 1636 an edition in twelve volumes was published, and this was reprinted at Frankfurt (1697), Mainz (1702), and again at Frankfurt (1723).

Variant readings and notes, in Latin, are to be found at the end of volumes 1, 4, and 6 of the original edition. The Latin translation, which was by Fronto himself, was based on that of Germanus Brixius (1534). According to Fuller, in his Worthies of England, the Latin text was derived from proof-sheets of Savile's work, which had been secured by fraud. But though Savile's text seems to have been employed, there is no evidence that it was fraudulently obtained².

¹ The title of the fourth volume is: S. patris nostri Joannis Chrysostomi Archiepiscopi Constantinopolitani de sacerdotio libri VI etc. nunc primum Graece et Latine coniunctim editi—[edidit] Fronto Ducaeus, Societatis Jesu Theologus—Lutetiae Parisiorum apud Claudium Morellum 1614. See Seltmann p. xii: the number of this volume, according to Seltmann, was given as X in his copy; this must be a mere misprint, for there was no tenth volume of the work until 1636.

² See the article on Sir Henry Savile in the Dictionary of National Biography. But it would rather appear from Fuller's words that it was the Greek text of Savile that was thus used by Fronto. 'The papists in Paris had their emissaries in England, who surreptitiously procured this knight's [Savile's] learned labours and sent them over weekly by the post into

For the text of the de sacerdotio, Fronto used the Augustanus of Hoeschel, adding readings from two 'Regii libri': of these one was bought by Francis I (this is styled by Fronto 'F'): the other was bought by Henry II (Fronto styles this MS. 'H'). He also had before him 'membranae nobilissimi viri Fr. Olivarii' ('O'): and the vetus interpretatio, which he consulted in the edition published at Paris in 1524 by Petrus Gromorsus. The editio princeps to which Fronto refers is not that of 1525, but the Louvain edition of 1529, which he usually cites as L or Lo.

6. In the year 1710 John Hughes, Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, brought out an edition of the de sacerdotio, 'typis academicis, impensis Edm. Jeffery'¹. The book contains the Greek text of the treatise, with Latin translation. Prefixed to the text are valuable dissertations on the Christian priesthood: also a life of Chrysostom taken from Cave's historia litteraria, which had in turn been borrowed from the life by Savile included in his edition of the works of Chrysostom. Notes, chiefly of a critical character, conclude Hughes' work.

In the first few sentences of these notes Hughes explains the principle in accordance with which he had prepared his text; he followed, he tells us, Savile's France.... Then Fronto Ducaeus...caused them to be printed there with implicit faith and blind obedience...only joining thereunto a Latin translation and some other inconsiderable additions': ep. J. G. Scheidt de optimis Chrysostomi editionibus (Dissert.) Wittenberg p. 35.

edition, as being the best of all: but in a few passages he had adopted the readings of Hoeschel and Fronto. Occasionally he had differed from all three editors, and had used for the correction of the text the manuscript evidence accumulated by Fronto. Hughes' text is in no respect better than those of his predecessors: but in his notes he often advocates the true reading, and supports his views with considerable learning and judgment.

7. It is convenient to reckon as an independent edition that of S. Thirlby, which appeared in Cambridge in 1712: but this does not profess to be more than a second edition of Hughes' work, upon which Hughes himself was engaged at the time of his death. Besides the de sacerdotio, however, Thirlby's edition of Hughes contained the oratio apologetica de fuga of Gregory of Nazianzus, the subject of this oration being, as we have seen, closely akin to that of Chrysostom's treatise on the priesthood¹.

As regards the text, Thirlby tells us that the first two books, and part of the third, of the de sacerdotio remained unchanged. He had, however, taken steps, by a fresh collation of manuscripts—these manuscripts are not specified—to ensure greater correctness in the text of the remaining portion of the work.

¹ The title of Thirlby's edition is: *S. Joannis Chrysostomi de sacerdotio libri VI. Graece et Latine: quibus dissertationes quasdam praemisit contra librum falso inscriptum 'Ecclesiae Christianae Iura Vindictata,' notasque adiecit Joannes Hughes A.M., Collegii Jesu Cantabri. 8. We now come to that which is generally regarded as the standard edition of Chrysostom. I refer to the edition by Dom Bernard de Montfaucon¹, a Benedictine monk of the order of St Maur. From 1718 to 1738 Montfaucon was engaged on this work: and considering his advanced age (eighty-three) at the time when it was completed it certainly bears testimony to his indefatigable activity. There is no doubt that Montfaucon was energetic in the collection of new material: and a number of homilies by Chrysostom were for the first time published in his edition. His prefatory remarks prefixed to each treatise, and the life of Chrysostom with the diatribae, or dissertations, in his concluding volume, although of a somewhat unmethodical character, are nevertheless very valuable. It is, however, impossible to be satisfied with the way in which he has dealt with the problems of textual criticism.

For a long time scholars have been aware of the unsatisfactory nature of the critical side of Montfaucon's otherwise useful edition: and I am thus relieved from the necessity of demonstrating its inadequacy in regard to the text of the de sacerdotio in particular. I need only refer to the clear and convincing proof of Montfaucon's remissness given by Dr F. Field, one of the most eminent editors of Chrysostom, in his edition of the Homilies on St Matthew²: and with this statement I entirely associate myself so far as concerns the present treatise. Montfaucon's reports of MS. readings are extremely meagre: he never refers to a MS. by a designation which would enable us to identify it, but tells us vaguely that a given reading has the support of 'two,' 'three,' or more MSS.: his statements with regard to readings, where I have been able to test them (and nearly all of the MSS. he used for the de sac. have been in my hands), I have found inaccurate, often seriously so. Furthermore, while recording mere mistakes of spelling, of little or no significance, he omits points of real importance. The language and style of Chrysostom he had not sufficiently mastered, so that he is often led to prefer an inferior reading. In short, the critical part of Montfaucon's edition is that which it is least possible to praise.

² See Field's ed. of Homm. in Matt. (Cambridge 1839) Praefatio pp. xiii sqq.: thus (p. xiv) "'codices non modo non contulit bonus monachus, sed interdum ne inspexit quidem...' ne unum quidem (codicem) nominatim appellat, sed 'unum,' 'duo,' 'alios,' hoc vel illud legere monens, umbris ac simulacris lectorem ludit" etc. For illustrations of the unsatisfactory nature of Montfaucon's apparatus to the de sac., see Journal of Theol. Studies, July 1906, p. 588.

The MSS. which Montfaucon claims to have consulted for the text of the de sac. are ten in number: viz. four Regii codices, nos. 1819, 1900, 1973, 2491: five from the library of the Comte de Seignelay (called the Bibliothèque Colbert), nos. 247, 248, 974, 3055, 3061: and one from the library of the Bishop of Metz, Henri Charles de Cambout de Coislin (Bibliothèque Coislin), no. 262. Montfaucon also used the editions by Savile and Morell. The title-page speaks of 'codices anglicani' as having been also consulted: but there is ground for believing that these 'codices' are simply Savile's edition under a disguised and high-sounding name.

9. Leaving to a later section the reprint of Montfaucon which appeared in 1839, and following chronological sequence, we next come to Bengel's edition of 1725. J. A. Bengel, the well-known author of the Gnomon Novi Testamenti, in that year brought out a useful edition of the de sacerdotio, the Greek text being accompanied by Latin notes¹. There is a strong flavour of Lutheran theology in these notes, and the contrast between this edition and Seltmann (as to whom see further on) is instructive and occasionally entertaining. It need hardly be said that the scholarship shewn in Bengel's observations is sound and thorough. He also added a Latin translation.

From Bengel himself we learn little as to the method which he followed in constituting his text. He speaks in general terms of having used the best of the manuscripts of early date. He praises the Augustanus (of which he made a fresh collation), but regards the Palatinus as interpolated. The version by the vetus interpres he has used with care, as 'perhaps older than all existing manuscripts.' Montfaucon's edition was also utilized by him, but only for the notes and the sixth book of the text: he had been unable to procure a copy of vol. i earlier, though it was published seven years before.

We have, however, from Leo (see the next section) who prepared the second edition of Bengel's work, the statement that Bengel's practice was to choose the 'middle reading' in case of a difference between several manuscripts. He adds that Bengel used as the basis of his text the edition of 1525.

Bengel's principle of preferring the reading that seemed to be the mean between conflicting readings may not indeed commend itself to us. It did not escape attack in earlier days. But most will probably agree with Leo that Bengel shewed sound critical judgment¹. His knowledge of the Greek Fathers was considerable: and though he contributed little to our knowledge of manuscript evidence he made a judicious choice, on the whole, among the readings known to him.

Stutgardiae 1725.* Besides the revised edition by Leo (see below) there have been many reprints of Bengel in the stereotyped Tauchnitz edition (in 1825, 1865, 1872, 1887, 1900).

10. We can now pass to Leo's work, published at Leipzig in 1834². This is a revised edition of Bengel; but with additional notes by Leo himself, and without the Latin translation which Bengel had appended. The text is in the main that of Bengel; Leo contented himself with a few alterations, mostly of small importance. He also made no fresh collations of manuscripts.

11. In 1837 F. W. Lomler edited at Rudolstadt selected works of Chrysostom³, including the de sacerdotio. Of more importance than the text is the introduction, which gives a valuable list of the early editions of the treatise.

12. In 1839 appeared the first volume (containing inter alia the de sacerdotio) of a revised Benedictine edition⁴. The publishers were Gaume Frères: the editor was Theobald Fix, who has set forth with great clearness the improvements introduced into Montfaucon's text in this recension.

The most important assistance was derived from Savile's edition: and the editor explicitly states the value which he came to attach to the work of the English scholar, which he had at first rated less highly. The passage, which is quoted below¹, will be found instructive by those who may still doubt the superiority of Savile's text to that of Montfaucon.

In regard to the de sacerdotio the editor of the revised Benedictine edition rendered a valuable service to scholars by publishing very full and accurate collations of three manuscripts, Parisinus 492, Parisinus 799 and codex Passioneus. These collations may be found at the end of the first complete volume (i.e. of vol. i pars altera) of the edition.

13. In Migne's Patrologia Graeca, Chrysostom's works occupy volumes 47 to 64. The de sacerdotio is in volume 48. There is nothing to indicate what new MSS., if any, were consulted. Montfaucon's list of ten MSS. is merely reprinted, and the critical notes are almost entirely based on Montfaucon, though supplemented by readings from Savile.

14. In 1861, Fr. Dübner², who had assisted Th. Fix in the labour of re-editing Chrysostom in the Benedictine edition, published a volume of selections from Chrysostom in the Firmin Didot series. It was to have been followed by volumes containing select works of other Greek Fathers, with Latin versions ; but the enterprise did not get beyond the volume just mentioned.

Dübner tells us that he consulted, for the text of the de sacerdotio, four manuscripts ; of these, three were of the tenth century, the remaining manuscript of the eleventh century.

The manuscripts used by him include Parisinus 492 and Parisinus 799, of which full collations were (as stated) published in 1839.

15. In 1867 D. Euelpides published at Athens the first part of a projected edition of the de sacerdotio, consisting of the first book with an introduction. This edition I have not seen. There is no copy in the British Museum.

16. In 1887, Carl Seltmann¹ edited the de sacerdotio with notes, chiefly of a homiletic tendency, for the use of Roman Catholic Seminaries. He made no independent investigation of the manuscripts ; but his notes contain a useful statement of the readings adopted by the early editors, and of the manuscripts which support those readings.

17. The text of the present edition is based on a fresh survey of old, and on a collection of much new material. Of this new material the larger part was amassed during a visit to Paris in December 1904, when I had the opportunity of examining the treasures of the Bibliothèque Nationale. The richness of that library in manuscripts of the de sacerdotio will be seen from the following list.

The evidence which we possess as to the original form of the text of the de sacerdotio is of three kinds : viz. (1) manuscripts, (2) citations found in later writers, and (3) translations into other languages.

I. Manuscripts.

The following MSS. have been used in the present edition :

a= Codex Augustanus : once at Augsburg (Augusta Vindelicorum), now in the Hof- und Staatsbibliothek at Munich, where it is cod. graec. monac. no. 354. Saec. xi parch. The de sac. occupies foll. 140—207. See Ign. Hardt Catalogus codicium MSS. graecorum Bibliothecae Regiae Bavariae (Munich 1810) vol. iv pp. 22—27.

This is one of the MSS. to which Hoeschel attached most importance (see list of editions, no. 3 above). A number of its readings is quoted by him. I have added others which were supplied to me by the courtesy of the Director of the Munich Library. See also E. Nestle Bengel als Gelehrter (1893) p. 35.

b= Codex Palatinus. I am unable to trace this manuscript. Hoeschel, as we have seen, used it for his edition, and his report of its readings is the only information that I have been able to use. In 1599, when he wrote, it was in the library at Heidelberg. It is not in the Universitäts-Bibliothek of that town at the present time : nor does it appear to be among the Palatine MSS. in the Vatican Library.

c= Cod. Reg. 492. Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris¹. Saec. x ('copié en 910'), parch. 316 foll. The de sac. is contained in foll. 240—316. Omont further designates this MS. as Fonteb. Reg. 2290. A full collation of its readings will be found at the end of vol. i of the Benedictine edition of 1839 (Bened.²).

d= Cod. Reg. 581. Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Saec. xi parch. 256 foll. Of the de sac. this MS. contains (in foll. 119—139) only a fragment, consisting of part of the fifth and the whole of the sixth book. Omont adds the designation Colbert 418.

e= Cod. Reg. 765 A. Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Saec. xi. parch. This MS. appears twice in Omont's Index ; once, correctly, as 765 A, but also as 565 A, a number to which there is no corresponding entry in the text of Omont's work.

¹ For the MSS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale see H. Omont Inventaire sommaire des manuscrits grecs de la Bibliothèque Nationale Paris 1898. I may add that while I have consulted most of the MSS. of the ixth to the xiiith cent. in that library, I have not had time to examine any of later date.

Also, the de sac. does not occupy foll. 40—80, as stated by Omont, but foll. 1—75. The MS. has been unintelligently handled by the binder. Fol. 75 ends with the words δεκτήριον λόχους (vi 12).

- f*=Cod. Reg. 799. Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Saec. xii parch. peint. 395 foll. The de sac. occupies foll. 1—87 r. A full collation is given at the end of Bened.² vol. i.
- g*=Cod. Reg. 800. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 310 foll. In Omont libri iv should be libri vi. The de sac., which is complete, occupies foll. 1—64.
- h*=Cod. Reg. 801. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 427 foll. Contains the de sac. in foll. 3—73. Omont also styles it Colbert 974. This is one of the MSS. consulted by Montfaucon.
- i*=Cod. Reg. 802. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 309 foll. Contains the de sac. in foll. 2—68 r. Also styled Colbert 247. It was used by Montfaucon.
- k*=Cod. Reg. 803. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 298 foll. Contains the de sac. in foll. 2—72. Also styled Colbert 248 : used by Montfaucon.
- l*=Cod. Reg. 804. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 698 foll. Contains Bks iii—vi of the de sac. in foll. 1—104. It came from Constantinople.
- m*=Cod. Reg. 805. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi ('is codex manu Manuelis presbyteri anno 1064 exaratus est') : parch. 236 foll. : is also styled Reg. 2351. The de sac. is contained in foll. 1—66r. The MS. came from Chios.
- n*=Cod. Reg. 806. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xii parch. 321 foll. peint. Also styled Hurault-Reg. 1819. The de sac. is contained in foll. 1—48. Used by Montfaucon.
- o*=Cod. Reg. 807. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 279 foll. Also styled Fonteb. Reg. 2354. It contains a fragment from the end of Bk vi (in foll. 1—5 r.).
- p*=Cod. Reg. 812. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 249 foll. : also styled Colbert 3055. It contains the de sac. in foll. 196v.—249. It was used by Montfaucon.
- q*=Cod. Reg. 813. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 244 foll. : also styled Mazarin-Reg. 1973. It contains in foll. 223—244 the first three books of the de sac. : the end of book ii and the beginning of book iii are mutilated. Of book vi only a fragment remains. This manuscript was used by Montfaucon.
- r*=Cod. Reg. 1024. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xii parch. 304 foll. : also styled Colbert 3061. It contains the de sac. in foll. 2—108r. : it was used by Montfaucon.

- s*=Cod. Reg. 1181. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xii—xiii (copié par Nicolas), parch. 228 foll.: also styled Trichet-Dufresne-Reg. 2350. Contains the de sac. in foll. 50—160.
- t*=Cod. Coislinianus 61. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 319 foll.: contains the de sac. in foll. 1—131 r.
- u*=Cod. Coislinianus 245. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. xi parch. 218 foll.: contains in foll. 1—56 the de sac. with the beginnings of the books mutilated.
- w*=Cod. Coislinianus 246. Bibl. Nat., Paris. Saec. x parch. 275 foll. ('copié par le moine Jean'): contains the de sac. in foll. 1—79.
- x*=Codex Passio-neus.
The manuscript breaks off at Montf. 379 A 11 (Bk ii 7): a full collation of the part that is preserved may be found in Bened.² vol. i.
- y*=Cod. Collegii Corporis Christi Oxon.: in C.C.C. Oxford. Saec. xiii parch. 140 foll. Coxe Catalogus codicium MSS. in Collegiis Aulisque Oxon. pars 2 p. 5 n. 21.
This MS. was used by Savile; who, however, does not specify it by name in recording his readings. I owe a full collation of it to my friend Mr Vincent Benson. For the marginal readings in this MS., which are numerous, I have used the symbol y.
- z*=Cod. Novi Collegii Oxon.: in New College, Oxford. Saec. xii parch. 360 foll. Coxe ubi supra pars 1 p. 23 no. 79. Savile used this MS. also: my collation of it is by Mr V. Benson.
- Berl*=Codex Berolinensis: in the Königliche Bibliothek, Berlin. It is cod. 354 Ham.: see p. 232, no. 403 of the Catalogus-Verzeichniss (Berlin 1897). Saec. xii parch. foll. 274. A quaternio is missing after fol. 8. The de sac. occupies fol. 1 r to 118 v.
I have ascertained the readings of some 30 passages in this MS.
- Franc*=Codex Franciscanus. It belonged to Francis I, king of France, and was used by Fronto Ducaeus, who styled it Fr. I have not been able to trace it.
- Henr*=Codex Henricianus. It belonged to Henry II, king of France, and was used by Fronto, who styled it H. Present whereabouts unknown.
- Marg*=Codex Margunii. This belonged to Maximus Margunius, bishop of Cythera, who corresponded with Savile. We possess only one or two of its readings, which are given in the early editions.
- Olio*=Codex Olivarii. Fronto, who used this MS., and styled it O, refers to it as 'membranae nobilissimi viri Fr. Olivarii.' Present whereabouts unknown.

Sin=Codex Sinaiticus: in the library of the monastery on Mt Sinai. Gardthausen Catal. codicum graecorum Sinaiticorum (Oxford 1886) no. 375. Saec. ix (it is dated 893 A.D.) parch.

I owe my knowledge of the readings of this MS. to the kindness of Archbishop Porphyrios.

There are several other MSS. of the de sac. at Florence¹, Rome², Venice³, and Vienna⁴ which seem to be of importance. I regret that I have been unable to make satisfactory arrangements for an examination of their readings.

Owing, no doubt, to the popularity of the de sac. and the consequent multiplication of copies, the lines of demarcation between the MSS. are not so clearly marked as in the case of some other authors. But the following groups seem to be distinguishable⁵. They are, in order of excellence, as follows:

Group 1 contains a, f, p.

„ 2 „	b, d, e, h, k, l, o, q, s, t, z, henr.
„ 3 „	g, i, r, w, y.
„ 4 „	c, m, n, u, x, berl, franc, marg, oliv, sin.

In group 1, a is better than f or p, and seems to me to be the best single MS. of the de sac.

¹ See Baudin's Catalogue of the Laurentian Library I pp. 251, 458, 505. The most important MS. seems to be that numbered pluteus 11 cod. 9 (no. 25).

² There are four MSS. of relatively early date (xi century) in the Vatican Library: viz. Vatic. Palat. gr. 15, 72, 553, 570. The first of these is perhaps the most important, as it seems that the text of the editio princeps is derived from this MS. For this information I am indebted to Father Ehrle.

³ In the Library of San Marco there are three MSS. (105, 107, 108).

⁴ In the Kaiserl. und Königliche Bibliothek there are three fairly old ('ziemlich alte') MSS. of the de sac.: viz. Theol. gr. 64, 111, 148. The last is imperfect. See Nessel's Catalogue I 192, 226: Lambecius Commentarii de Bibl. Caesarea Vindobonensi II 787.

⁵ For a fuller discussion of the MSS. of the de sac. see an article in the Journal of Theological Studies, July 1906, pp. 575—590.

In group 2 there is a close affinity between b and henr. Also between h, t, z. In h there are elements in common with group 4.

In group 3 there is a noteworthy harmony between its component MSS., so that in this group there is greater uniformity of reading than in other groups. The readings, however, are inferior, and not seldom bear traces of interpolation.

In group 4, c, x, berl., and sin, have elements in common with group 3. In group 4 we may also place the marginal readings of y (y'), with which the readings of the vulgate text (Montfaucon's edition) often agree.

In a number of cases, groups 1, 2, 3 are combined together against 4: and in such cases the reading of the three groups is usually preferable. The combination of the groups 2, 3 seems to present better readings than that of groups 1, 4, in the not very frequent cases where these respective combinations occur.

The readings of the MSS. of group 3 are often, as has been said, identical. It seemed desirable to have a symbol to represent the consensus of these MSS.: and in this edition the symbol adopted is G (from g, the first MS. in this group). Similarly in group 4, the symbol C is used to denote the consensus of the MSS. c, m, n, u, x, which often give identical readings. As in previous volumes of this series, an asterisk is used to denote the first hand of a MS., the figure 1 to denote the corrector's hand, e.g. *y, y¹. For convenience the readings of Montfaucon's edition of 1718 have been cited as Vulg.

II. Citations from the de sac. in later writers.

The following writers quote passages from the de sacerdotio:

Anon. = Anonymus Scriptor Vitae S. Chrysostomi (later than 950 A.D.): see Savile's edition viii p. 299. The passage quoted is from Anthusa's appeal to her son. It begins καθίσασι πλησίον (i 2) and ends with εὐδοκιμήσεως ἐξ ισης ἐμοι.

Georg.=Georgius Alexandrinus (seventh century): Savile viii p. 167. The passage quoted begins καθίσασι πλησίον (i 2), as above, and ends οὗτος δὲ σημός κατέχετω σε πρὸς ήμᾶς. This citation is of little value for critical purposes, being more of the nature of a paraphrase.

*Suidas*¹ quotes two passages from the de sac., which he embodies together in one long quotation, viz. (1) iii 16 ἐννόησου οὐν ὀπούν τινα κ.τ.λ. and (2) vi 4 ποικίλου αὐτὸν εἶναι δεῖ κ.τ.λ.

Sym.=Syneon Metaphrastes (tenth century): Savile viii. p. 376. The passage cited begins ἐπεὶ γὰρ ἥσθετο (of Anthusa) i 2, and ends εὐδοκιμήσεως ἐξ ισης ἐμοι.

III. Ancient translations of the de sacerdotio.

(a) Syriac.

The following Syriac MSS. in the British Museum contain versions of portions of the de sac. I have given the references by the numeration of Montfaucon.

1. Add. 14,612=Catal. 753. i. e. Saec. vi or vii. Contains the first book, which begins on fol. 53 v. of the MS. (Montf. 362 A 1 to 371 B 2).
2. Add. 14,612=Catal. 753. i. k. Saec. vi or vii. Contains discontinuous extracts from book iii, beginning on fol. 73 v. (Montf. 382 C 13 to 394 E 1).

¹ s.v. Ιωάννης, Ἀντιοχεύς: Gaisford's Suidas vol. i p. 1787. Neither the source of these two passages nor the fact that there are two and not merely one seems to be recognized by Gaisford or by Bernhardy, the chief recent editors of Suidas. The text of the citations presents an interesting problem, for the discussion of which see Journal of Theol. Studies (l.c.).

7. Add. 14,611 = Catal. 813. 16 (2). Saec. x. Contains an extract from book vi, beginning on fol. 1 r. (Montf. 428 B 7 sqq.).
8. Add. 12,164. Saec. vi. On fol. 131 r. there is a quotation from the de sac. in a treatise by Philoxenos of Hierapolis (Montf. 394 B 4 sqq.). Also, on fol. 139 v. (from the same treatise) we have Montf. 376 A 9 sqq.
9. Add. 14,612. Contains the first citation under 8 (with one verbal difference).

All my knowledge of these Syriac MSS. is derived from information which Mr E. W. Brooks was kind enough to furnish. He writes to the effect that the Syriac is a very loose translation in these passages from the Greek, so that to make a complete collation would amount to copying out the whole. He has, however, provided me with the chief variations, especially in those passages where various readings are noted by the editors of Chrysostom. None of the readings suggested by the Syriac version seems to be of importance¹.

(b) Latin.

A large number of Latin translations of the de sac. has been published. But the only one which can throw light on the original Greek text is the *vetus interpretatio*², to which reference has been made in connexion with Bengel's edition of the treatise. This ancient version was known to Bengel in an edition published soon after the discovery of printing: neither the place nor date at which it appeared is mentioned on the title-page. It may be observed that Lomler speaks of three separate versions sine anni et loci notitia: and possibly Bengel's copy belonged to one of these editions. In 1504 the vetus interpretatio was published at Basle, but with various alterations. Another edition appeared in 1524 at Paris apud Petrum Gromorsum.

¹ No Arabic or Armenian version is known to me. The Arabic versions would probably come from the Syriac or the Coptic, and thus be comparatively late. Ethiopic versions also (if any exist) would almost certainly be as late as the 15th or 16th century, as I learn from Dr A. Cowley of the Bodleian Library. For Coptic and Slavonic versions see Bardenhewer op. cit. p. 328 sqq.

² Its author is generally alluded to as vetus interpres.

The value of this version by the vetus interpres is considerable. His identity has not yet been made out: many hold that he was Anianus the Deacon, of Celeda, who defended Pelagianism: see Jerome, Epp. 143 2.

7. English translations of the de sacerdotio.

The following have published translations of the de sac. into English:

H. Hollier, London, 1728: J. Bunce, London, 1759: T. Mason, Philadelphia, 1826: F. W. Hohler, London, 1837: E. G. Marsh, London, 1844: B. Harris Cowper, London, 1866: W. R. W. Stephens (the late Dean of Winchester) in Ph. Schaff's Select Library of Nicene and Post Nicene Fathers, series i, vol. 9, 1892.

So far as I have tested these translations, the last named seems to be the best. The de sacerdotio has also been translated into French, German, Italian, Spanish, Danish and no doubt other European languages: for details see Lomler.

- I. I. Ἐμοὶ πολλοὶ μὲν ἐγένοντο φίλοι γνήσιοί τε καὶ ι εμοὶ μεν πολλοὶ fwxyz

I. Of the many friends of Chrysostom, by far the closest was Basil. The two were united by affinity of tastes and association in study, and were for a time inseparable companions: but eventually Basil adopted the monastic life, while Chrysostom was still swayed by worldly ambitions.

Basil nevertheless continued to urge his friend to join him, and it seemed that his arguments were likely to prevail.

1. φίλοι] These included Euagrius, Theodorus (afterwards Bishop of Mopsuestia), and Maximus (Socrates H. E. vi 3).

ἀληθεῖς, καὶ τοὺς τῆς φιλίας νόμους καὶ εἰδότες καὶ φυλάττοντες ἀκριβῶς· εἰς δέ τις τουτωνὶ τῶν πολλῶν, ἅπαντας αὐτὸὺς ὑπερβαλλόμενος τῇ πρὸς ἡμᾶς φιλίᾳ, τοσοῦτον· 5 ἐφίλουνείκησεν ἀφεῖναι κατόπιν αὐτοὺς, δοσον ἐκεῖνοι τοὺς ἄπλως πρὸς ἡμᾶς διακειμένους. 2. 2. els] i.e. Basil (Βασίλειος), not mentioned by name until c. 4. The identity of this Basil has not yet been definitely determined. It is, however, certain that he was not Basil the Great, of Caesarea in Cappadocia: see Introduction p. xxxiv.

3. τοσοῦτον κτλ.] 'strove as hard to leave them behind', i.e. to outstrip them in the competition for Chrysostom's friendship. For ἀφεῖναι κατόπιν cp. vi 12 πολλῷ τῷ μέτρῳ κατόπιν ἀφεῖναι.

5. ἄπλως ... διακ.] 'who were neutrally disposed towards me': that is, had no special affection.

6. μαθημάτων] Chrys. intended to adopt the career of an advocate: cp. τὸν δικαστηρίῳ προσεδρεύοντα below.

7. διδασκάλοις] Chrys. learnt rhetoric from Libanius, the famous sophist; and philosophy from Andragathius (of whom nothing else seems to be known): see Socrates H. E. vi 3, and Sievers Leben des Libanius p. 150. His teachers in Christian doctrine were Meletius (then Bishop of Antioch), Diodorus, and Carterius: Soz. viii 2.

9. οὐς ἐπονούμεθα] For the use of the middle, πονεῖσθαι, instead of the active, cp. ii 1 τῷ περ ταῦτα πονούμενῳ, and v 5 τοῦ πονεῖσθαι ἀπῆλλακται (where it is used, as here, of rhetorical exercises): also Hom. in 2 Cor. 503 οὐ γεωργὸς δὶ' ζλου πονεῖται τοῦ ἔτους. The accus. with πονεῖσθαι is more common in verse.

13. καὶ ἔτερα δέ κτλ.] 'And other bonds besides these remained unbroken and secure': i.e. besides having tastes in common, Chrysostom and Basil were well matched in respect of (a) fatherland, (b) wealth, and (c) position. 'Εφυλαττέτο, lit. 'were preserved,' indicates that all these bonds of union remained unchanged as they grew up. The vulgate reading (see critical note) gives an easier construction: but it seems to be interpolated.

πρὸς τούτοις ἡμῖν ἐφυλάττετο ἄρραγῆ τε καὶ βέβαια. οὗτε γὰρ ἐπὶ πατρίδος μεγέθει ἔτερος ἐτέρου μᾶλλον φρονεῖν εἰχεν· οὗτε ἐμοὶ μὲν πλοῦτος ὑπέροχκος ἦν, ἐκεῖνος δὲ ἐσχάτη συνέζη πενίᾳ· ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ τῆς οὐσίας μέτρον τὸ τῆς προαιρέσεως ἴσοστάσιον ἐμιμεῖτο· καὶ γένος δὲ ἡμῖν 5 ὁμότιμον ἦν, καὶ πάντα τῇ γνώμῃ συνέτρεχεν. 4. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἔδει τὸν μακάριον τὸν τῶν μοναχῶν μεταδιώκειν βίον καὶ τὴν φιλοσοφίαν τὴν ἀληθῆ, οὐκέτι ἡμῖν ὁ ξυγὸς οὐτος ἴσος ἦν, ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν ἐκείνου πλάστιγξ ἐκουφίζετο μετέωρος· ἐγὼ δ' ἔτι ταῖς τοῦ κόσμου πεπεδημένος 10 ἐπιθυμίαις καθεῖλκον τὴν ἐμαυτοῦ, καὶ ἐβιαζόμην κάτω μένειν, νεωτερικαῖς αὐτὴν ἐπιβρίθων φαντασίαις. 5. 2. πατρίδος] Antioch, the capital of Syria. For a description of its splendour see Libanius I 275 sqq. (ed. Reiske): and cp. A. Puech St Jean Chrysostome et les mœurs de son temps pp. 15 sqq.

3. οὐτε ἐμοὶ μὲν κτλ.] οὐτε affects not merely the μὲν-clause, but the whole sentence: see Field on Homim. in Matt. 363 A, who quotes Dio Chrysostom p. 517 44 (Reiske): καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα οὐχ ὁ μὲν δῆμος, ὑμεῖς, ἐπεθυμήσατε τῶν ἔργων, τῶν δὲ ἐν τέλει τις ἀντείπεν...ἀλλὰ πάντες κτλ. We may add Demosthenes de Corona 179 οὐκ ἔπον μὲν ταῦτα, οὐκ ἔγραψα δέ, 'I was not content to speak without proposing.'

5. τὸ...ἴσοστ.] 'equality': from ἴσος, and ἴσταναι 'to weigh.'

8. τὴν φιλοσοφίαν τ. δλ.] The word φιλοσοφία is commonly found after the time of Eusebius in the technical sense of the ascetic and monastic life: see Greg. Nyss. Or. Cat. 18 (p. 76 ed. Rawley), Suicer Thesaurus, s.v.; and, for the earlier history of the word, Lightfoot on

Col. ii 8. It is sometimes used, more widely, of the practice of the Christian religion (Mason Five Orations of Greg. Naz. p. 10): but not apparently by Chrysostom: see Field's Index to Homm. in Matt. s.v. φιλοσοφία.

9. ὁ ξυγὸς] 'the beam' of the balance: this word keeps up the metaphor of τὸ ἴσοστάσιον above. In the sense here required the masculine ὁ ξυγός, instead of τὸ ξυγόν, is used by Plato (Timaeus, 63 B).

ib. πλάστιγξ] 'pan' of a balance. There may be an allusion to the game of cottabos: the word πλάστιγξ is sometimes applied to the saucer or scale into which wine was thrown by the players (see L. and S. s.v. κότταβος).

11. τὴν ἐμαυτοῦ] sc. πλάστιγγα. The word ψυχὴ, which is added in some MSS., seems to be a marginal gloss.

12. νεωτ. ἐπιβ. φ.] 'weighing it down with youthful vanities.' For the transitive use of ἐπιβρίθειν cp.

ταῦθα λοιπὸν ἡ μὲν φιλία βέβαιος ἔμενεν ἡμῖν, καθάπερ καὶ πρότερον ἡ δὲ συνουσία διεκόπητο. οὐ γὰρ ἦν τοὺς μὴ περὶ τὰ αὐτὰ σπουδάζοντας κοινὰς ποιεῖσθαι τὰς διατριβάς. 6. βρίθηται (passive) ii 7: for φαντασία = 'pomp,' 'vanity,' cp. adv. opρuցn. vitae monasti. II 67 Λ τὴν βιωτικὴν καταπατήσας φαντασίαν.

4. ἀνέκυψα κτλ.] 'rose from the sea of worldly cares.' For ἀνακύπτειν cp. ad Theodorum iαρցtum II 40 D ἀνακύψαι τῶν κυμάτων, Plat. Phaedo 109 ε (where it is used of fish).

5. βιωτικοῦ] 'worldly,' from blos, which is often used = vita saecularis: cp. βιωτικάς φροντίδας i 2, ἀνθρώποι βιωτικολ iii 15. See also Lk. xxi 34, 1 Cor. vi 3.

ib. κλύδωνος] For the metaphor cp. i 2 τοῦ χειμῶνος ἐκέλουν καὶ τοῦ κλύδωνος, i 4 ἀγρίων κυμάτων: also in Hamlet: 'to take up arms against a sea of troubles.'

ib. ἄμφω τῷ χεῖρε] 'with open arms.' The phrase is cast in a proverbial form, hence its elliptical character. It occurs again in Homm.

in 1 Thess. 458 F. Προτείνας, which is found in one or two inferior MSS, appears to be a gloss, inserted to fill up the ellipse: see, for a similar phenomenon in St Paul's Epistles, Lightfoot Notes on Epp. of St Paul p. 199.

9. πλὴν ἀλλά] used in late Greek instead of the simple πλὴν or ἀλλά: Schmid Atticismus i 285.

14. προσεδρεύοντα] 'attending constantly': cp. quod regulares seminae viris etc. 260 Λ παρθένον...τῷ νυμφίῳ προσεδρεύονταν. In the other two passages of the de sac. where it occurs the verb means 'to lie in wait for': ii 2 στρατόπεδον ὄμδον...ταῦτη προσεδρεύοντα τῇ πολμῃ; and iii 17 ἔχθρὸς...ἐφέστηκε καὶ προσεδρεύει.

ib. τῇ σκηνῇ] On the passion of the Antiochenes for the theatre see Puech pp. 268 sqq.

1. εἰς ἀγορὰν ἐμφ.] In this phrase, which is classical (see L. and S. s.v. ἐμβάλλω), ἐμβάλλειν is intransitive: cp. i 4, iii 17.

3. ἀθρόως] 'suddenly.' See other instances of this meaning of the word in Index III to this edition, and the corresponding Index to Mason's Five Orations of Greg. Naz.

4. ἦν π. ὕδ. ἐπ. ἀπ. τ.] lit. 'he then gave birth to the desire with which he had long been labouring': i.e. he expressed a wish which he had long been anxious to make known: cp. Homm. in Rom. 733 D ἵνα τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν, ἦν πάλαι ὕδινον, ταῦτην ἀποτέκω.

8. ἦν ἐν χερσί] 'was in hand,' i.e. was being arranged.

II. But at this point Anthusa, the mother of Chrysostom, interferes. She tearfully recalls to her son's memory the anxieties of her widowhood, and the sacrifices which she has made on his behalf. She begs him to stay with her until her death.

After that event, which cannot be long delayed, he will be free to do as he desires.

9. τῆς μητρός] Anthusa. Upon her had fallen the entire responsibility of Chrysostom's education, her husband (Secundus) having died when Chrys. was a mere infant: cp. τὰς γὰρ ὕδινας τὰς ἐπὶ σοι διαδεξάμενος οἱ θάνατος ἐκείνοις below.

10. ἐπωδαὶ] The singular ἐπωδή is a 'spell' or 'enchantment.' Hence the plural = 'entreaties' which exercise a spell or charm: cp. adv. oppugn. vit. monast. II 60 A.

10. διεκώλυσαν κτλ.] At this period parents frequently tried to prevent their sons from embracing the monastic life: see Chrysostom's treatise adversus oppugnatores vitae monasticae; esp. II 59 D, where we have an appeal made by a father to his son much in the same vein as that of Anthusa. See also Puech pp. 251 sqq.

14. ἐπὶ τῆς εὐνῆς ἦς] i.e. ἐπὶ τῆς εὐνῆς ἐφ' ἦς: cp. i 4 ἀπὸ τῆς ἡμέρας

6. τὰ τῆς χηρ. δεινά] See on this subject Chrysostom’s treatise ad viduam iuniorem, and in Annam I 707 C: Puech p. 134.

8. λόγος γὰρ οὐδεὶς κτλ.] ‘no words could adequately express’: lit. ‘could reach.’

12. φροντίδων κτλ.] ‘cares beyond her age and sex.’ Anthusa was left a widow at about the age of 20: cp. below on δευτέραις δηληται γάμοις, and on οἱ δὲ γεγηρακότες.

15. τῶν τὰ δημ. κτλ.] ‘the insults of tax-gatherers.’ δημόσιον = ‘a tax,’ Lat. publicum, and πράττειν = ‘to collect’ (cp. the v.l. εἰσπραττόντων). At vi 4, however, δημόσια πράττειν = ‘to be a public man, politician,’ Lat. rem publicam agere.

16. τ. τ. εἰ. καταβολαῖς] ‘payment of taxes.’

3. δευτέροις ὁμ. γ.] See ad viduam iun. 2, where Chrysostom relates that one day his 'sophist' (i.e. probably, his teacher Libanius) questioned him about his mother Anthusa: ὡς δὲ εἴποι ὅτι ἐτῶν τεσσαράκοντα γεγονοῦα εἰκοσιν ἔχει λοιπὸν, ἐξ οὗ τὸν πατέρα ἀπέβαλε τὸν ἐμόδιον, ἔξεπλάγη, καὶ ἀνεβόσει μέγα, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς παρόντας ἰδὼν· Βαβαί, ἔφη, οἷα παρὰ Χριστιανοῖς γυναῖκες εἰσιν. Chrys., like St Paul (1 Cor. vii. 40), discouraged second marriages, but did not absolutely forbid them: see his treatise de non iterando coniugio, and Puech p. 110.

4. ἔπεισαγαγεῖν] Similarly we find the phrase μητριάν παισιν ἔπεισάγειν of a widower marrying again: L. and S. s.v. ἔπεισάγω.

6. κάμων] (a refining) 'furnace': metaphorically applied to a state of trial, as in Deut. iv. 30, Jer. xi. 4 (with σιδηρᾶ); Is. xlvi. 10 (LXX): cp. iii. 11 below.

17. ὄρφαναν δυσ.] For the accusative with δυστυχεῖν in post-classical Greek cp. Synesius Eph. cliv. γυνὴ δυστυχήσασα χηρεῖαν (quoted by Hoeschel).

9. οἱ δὲ γεγηρ.] Note the gender: a woman, when speaking of herself in the plural number, uses the masculine. The statement in the text, that Anthusa was so old as to be in daily expectation of death, is not to be taken literally. For if Chrysostom was born in 345, his mother, who was not more than 20 at the time of his birth (see on δευτέρους διμήσας γάμοις above) was born not earlier than 325, and in that case, at the time of the events recorded in the present passage, which is probably about 373, she was not more than 48 years of age.

We must then suppose that her excitement leads her to exaggerate.

10. τ. δοτέος τ. πατρός] Contrast the words of the dying Monnica to her sons: Augustine Conf. ix 27: ponite hoc corpus ubi cunque: nihil vos eius cura conturbet etc.

12. ὁ κωλ. οὐδεῖς] Cp. i 4 δὲ δὲ ἔξαρησθμενός σε—οὐκ ἔστιν. The present participle is also found in such clauses: δὲ γὰρ καταναγκάζων... οὐκ ἔστιν ii 3.

14. μάτην καὶ εἰκῆ] The use of two almost synonymous words side by side is a feature of Chrysostom's style: cp. μανθάνω καὶ συνέημι ii 4, ἐρυθρίσας καὶ φοινιχθείς ii 6, δέδοκε καὶ τρέμει iii 7, v 4.

7. ἐπειδὴ μηδὲ] After ἐπειδὴ (ἐπειδῇ) and δτε the use of μή for οὐ is very common in late Greek: cp. iii. 14 ἐπει μηδὲ πῦρ...πτόκειται, ii. 1 δτι μηδὲ ἀπάτην δεῖ...καλεῖν: and see Clement of Alexandria Stromateis vii (ed. Hort-Mayor) pp. 289, 295.

10. οὐν ἔδω.] 'was not put out of countenance.'

III. Suddenly the rumour is spread that Basil and Chrysostom are to be made bishops. Chrysostom agrees to submit to consecration should this be forced upon his friend: but secretly resolves not to carry out his part of the agreement. Presently, when the critical moment arrives, Chrys. conceals himself; Basil is consecrated alone: and soon after comes in great despondency to Chrys., who is merely amused at his distress.

16. ἱερωσύνης] The vulgate reading ἐπισκοπῆς, for which I cannot discover any ms. authority, no doubt gives the correct sense. From ii. 2 δταν δὲ ἐκκλησίας προστῆναι δέη κτλ., iii. 12 and following chapters, it is clear that what was proposed was to consecrate Basil and Chrys. as bishops, and not to ordain them presbyters or deacons. In iii. 15 we have τὸν ἐπίσκοπον mentioned specifically.

It has been objected that Chrys. at this time was not yet 30 years old, and hence was not eligible for consecration, according to the canons of the Council of Neo-Caesarea. See, however, Bingham Origines Ecclesiasticae Book II x 1: Introduction p. xxiv. Athanasius was possibly under 30 when he was made bishop: but cp. Gwatkin Studies of Arianism p. 71 n.

IV. Basil proceeds to describe the difficult position in which he has been placed by the action of Chrys. He is constantly blamed, he says, for not having known beforehand his friend's intention: while those who selected Chrys. for consecration are indignant at being openly flouted. Basil then reproaches his friend, more in sorrow than in anger, for the deception which he has practised.

2. διέπτυσας] 'you despised.'

We may perhaps compare the use of ut in Latin (after ita) to denote limitation or restriction.

2. φαιὰ περιβ.] ‘robe themselves in black,’ as a sign of grief and humility.

6. οἱ παῖδες αὐτῶν] i.e. those who are young enough to be their sons.

9. ἐπιφύονται] ‘fasten upon,’ like hounds upon a quarry: see Field’s note on Homm. in Eph. 25 E: also Mason Five Orations p. 6.

11. ἀπλῶς] ‘thoughtlessly’: in this sense it recurs in iii 10, 13, 18.

8. ἐν μέσῳ παγίδων] Eccl. ix 13, where the true reading is διαβάνεις — περιπατεῖς, changed by Chrys. to first person plural.

14. ἀδελφὸς κτλ.] Prov. xviii 19, where the LXX text has ἀδελφὸς ὑπ. ἀδ. βοηθ. ὡς πόλις ὄχυρὰ καὶ ὑψηλὴ, ἵσχει δὲ ὥσπερ τεθεμελωμένην βασιλείον. Hence Leo would read in the present passage μεμοχλευμένα βασιλεία (neut. plur.). Chrys., however, probably quoted from memory: cp. on ii 1 τὸς ἄρα κτλ., ii 2 οὐδὲς γάρ κτλ., iii 16 κλίνον, etc., also Appendix p. 175.

19. ἐκ περιουσίας] 'needlessly': i.e. although it was not strictly necessary. The word περιουσία occurs again at iii 16 ἐν πολλῇ περιουσίᾳ ('wealth'), and vi 11 ὡρᾶς μεθ' θητης δείκνυσι τῆς περιουσίας ('fullness') ὁ θεός.

V. Chrysostom begins his reply. He admits the deception, but claims that it was justifiable, being intended for Basil's benefit. He gives instances where deceit is by common consent allowed to be practised: thus (a) in war (b) in the art of medicine. The examples of Michal, Jonathan, and St Paul are also cited by him in support of this contention.

In this sentence ει goes with μη δυναίμην, and δπως παύσαντο depends on πάντα ποιῶν. ὡς (after κεχρημένον) is = ωστε, and goes with the infinitive θελῆσαι.

12. ἦς—σπουδῆς] i.e. σπουδῆς ἦν.

14. ἐγνώκαμεν κτλ.] ‘we have determined to set sail on the sea of apology’: ἀφεῖναι is here used for πλοίον ἀφεῖναι (solvere navem): cp. i 4 ὥσπερ πλοῖον... ήμᾶς ἀφῆκας.

1. εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἀεὶ κτλ.] A certain kind of deception, or 'pious fraud,' which Chrys. here defends, is styled by him oikonomia ('good management'): see later on in this chapter μᾶλλον δὲ οὐδὲ ἀπάτη τὸ τοιούτον δεῖ καλεῖν, ἀλλ' oikonomiam τινα. His attitude towards falsehoods which have an honourable object is the same as that of Plato: in Rep. 389 B (cp. 382 D) it is laid down that the rulers of the city may deceive ἢ πολεμῶν ἢ πολιτῶν ἔνεκα ἐπ' ὥφελειᾳ τῆς πθλεως. Cp. also Clem. Alex. Stromates vii 9 (p. 279 ed. Hort-Mayor) quoted on τῶν λατρῶν below. In other passages, however, Chrys. denounces dissimulation and extols veracity. Cp. Homm. in Ioann. 164 B οὐδὲν τῆς ἀληθείας φανερώτερον κτλ., and other passages referred to in Montfaucon's Index Rerum s.v. 'Veritas,' and in Cognet p. 27.

For other early Christian views on the subject see Augustine de mendacio and Enchir. 18: Acta S. Iuliani Anazarb. (Analecta Boll. vol. xv).

2. παρὰ τὴν προ. κτλ.] 'is made bad or good by the intention of those who employ it.' Παρά = 'because of': this use, with accus., is found in classical authors (v. L. and S. s.v.): cp. also, for exx. in Chrys., Field on Homm. in Matt. 512 C, who quotes e.g. the phrase οὐδὲν παρὰ τοῦτο, nihil hinc (eveniel).

4. δεῖξον κτλ.] sc. ημᾶς: 'prove that I contrived this with intent to hurt.'

5. μὴ δτι] 'to say nothing of,' 'so far from' (bringing).

ib. ἀποδέχεσθαι] The subject of this verb is τοὺς βουλομένους; and its object is τὸν ἀπατῶντα.

11. τῆς ἀπάτης...κατορθ.] 'succes- cestes won by deception': cp. κατορθοῦσι τοὺς πολέμους below.

1. παρ' οὐδέν κτλ.] 'the victors suffer almost as much loss as the vanquished.' Παρ' οὐδέν = 'with no difference,' i.e. 'propemodum,' 'almost': παρά has here the same force as in παρ' δλγον, παρά τοσοῦτον.

The word ηττον, which rests on little or no authority, is no doubt a gloss, due to a misconception of παρ' οὐδέν, which was thought to be = οὐδέν. See Field's discussion of this passage, note on Homm. in Matt. 641 A.

1. τὸ τῆς ἀπάτης κτλ.] 'to put on the mask of deception.' προσωπεῖον is also used by Plutarch and Lucian, instead of the more classical πρόσωπον.

2. ἐπὶ σκηνῆς] Chrysostom's early passion for the stage (cp. i 1 περὶ τὰς ἐν τῇ σκηνῇ τέρψεις ἐπτομένων) suggests similes drawn from that source.

5. ἰατρῶν παιδας] Cp. ἰατρῶν παισιν vi 4. It is a periphrasis for ἰατρούς: cp. ὑπὲς Ἀχαῶν (Homer), παῖδες Ἰνδῶν (Herodotus): also frequent in LXX.

7. ἡ φλὸξ] 'the fever-heat.'

8. πολὺς ἐνέκειτο] 'was importunate,' 'insisted.' The phrase is cited from Hdt. vii 158.

10. ἐμφορηθ...ἐπιθυμίας] Cp. ad Theodorum lapsus I 30 A ἐμφορηθῆναι τῆς ἐπιθυμίας.

11. οὐ γάρ] The γάρ explains the epithet δλεθρίου.

14. ἀπορουμένης] Probably middle; ἀποροῦμαι=ἀπορῶ is also found in Hdt. and Xenophon. It might, however, be passive: for Chrys. uses δπορεῖτινα= 'to place someone in a difficulty': cp. Homm. in Matt. 579 A.

15. ἐκβεβλημένης] 'having been rejected,' i.e. as valueless.

17. ἄρτι...προελθόν] The taste of the newly-baked clay would help to deceive the patient, and to persuade him that the water was really wine. Προελθών (masc.) of several editions seems to be merely a misprint.

ib. ταύτη] sc. τῇ δσμῇ.

7. ἔσπασε] 'drained': cp. Ἐλκω, Lat. duco, in the same sense. The genitive with σπᾶν is cited from Athenaeus and Philo. The reading τὸ δοθέν (see critical note) is probably due to πολυπρ. ἡνέσχ. τὸ δοθέν above (Bengel).

I., II. Chrysostom develops his argument that the deception was for Basil's good, as it was the means of helping him to fulfil the highest duty of a Christian: viz. that imposed by Christ upon St Peter when He bade him 'feed His sheep.' Chrysostom adds that the difficulty of guarding the sheep of Christ is far greater than any earthly analogy could suggest.

1. ἐπὶ καλῷ] 'with good intent.'

2. κεχρῆσθαι] The perfect of χρῆσθαι seems to be occasionally used with a present meaning, perhaps on the analogy of κεκτῆσθαι: see Clem. Alex. Stromateis viii (ed. Hort-Mayor) p. 216.

2. σὸν] i.e. σὸν ἔργον, 'your duty.'

8. φαίνεσθαι πρ.] 'to be seen to do.'

10. τὸν κορυφαῖον] The fact that St Peter is here styled the 'leader' or 'chief' of the Apostles is no indication of Chrysostom's views with regard to the Roman See: cp. on ἑτέρως τις iv 3: also Puley *The Primitive Saints and the See of Rome*³ pp. 117-128.

11. Πέτρε] Jn. xxi 15 (Σλιμων

'Ιωάνου, ἀγαπᾶς με πλέον τούτων; κτλ. WH.).

14. ὁ τὰς ἀπάντων] The words δ...καρδίας form an iambic (senarius comicus). For other instances in the de sac. where the words of Chrys. compose a verse see iii 11 ὡς Χριστιανῶς ἔστι προσῆκον ἀνδράσιν, iii 14 πρὸς τοὺς ἀγῶνας, ῥθίως ἐλέγχεται, iv 2 πόθεν γὰρ ἔστιν ἐλπίσαι σωτηρίαν;. In these cases an iambic is formed. At iii 14, τοῦ καπνοῦ προσέφλεξε καὶ ἡμαύρωσεν ἄτασαν, we have a hexameter: and at iii 16, βιάζωνται διὰ τὴν γαστρὸς ἀνάγκην, part of a hexameter.

15. ἐμβατεύων] 'visiting': used in classical Greek with accus. or gen., not dative.

18. τῷ Πέτρῳ κτλ.] The successors of Peter are bishops in every country and every age: Puller L.c.

20. τίς ἄρα κτλ.] Matt. xxiv. 45; cp. Lk. xii. 42. Instead of ἐπὶ τῆς οἰκετελας (θεραπελας) of the Gospels, Chrys., quoting from memory, gives ἐπὶ τῆς οἰκλαν. WH. read κατέστησεν in Matt., καταστήσει in Lk.

7. παραστῆσαι κτλ.] ‘desirous of proving how rare this is’ (i.e. fidelity).

12. ταῦτα πράττων κτλ.] The order of the words is ἀ ποιοῦντα τὸν Πέτρον ἔφησε κτλ.: ‘by doing which Peter would be able (so Christ said) to surpass’ etc. The subject of ἔφησε is ὁ Χριστός (to be supplied from the context). For the general structure of the sentence cp. ii ἡ ἀπερ δείγματα τῆς...ἀγάπης αὐτὸς ἔφησεν εἶναι ὁ Χριστός, ii ii εἰκότως ἄρα τῆς...ἀγάπης τὴν...σπουδὴν ὁ Κύριος ἔφησεν εἶναι σημεῖον. ‘Ἐφῆκεν,’ ‘permitted,’ which is the vulgate reading, could not take a future infin. (δυνήσεσθαι).

16. νηστείαν] Chrys. often maintains the necessity of fasting (especially during Lent): cp. iii 12, vi 5: Puech p. 214.

19. ναμάτων] ‘water’ (adv. ὁργη. vit. monast. II 61 A): a word chiefly used in verse, but also in prose by Plato.

23. οὐδεὶς γάρ κτλ.] I Cor. ii 11, apparently cited from memory. WH. read τις γάρ οἶδεν ἀνθρώπων τὰ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου εἰ μή κτλ. The present passage has been used to illustrate the attitude of Chrys. towards confession. While he sometimes lays stress on the power of the priest to forgive sins (iii 5), at other times he urges sinners to confess directly to God: de incom-

 The right, or at least the expediency, of persecution for religious belief is here contested: see on this Puech pp. 202 sqq. The practice of Chrysostom was not always on a level with his precepts, as Puech

VI. 10. ἵνα μή τις] Chrys. for-as one writing for the public, not conversing privately with his friend.

12. τῆς ληθῆς] 'forgetfulness not allowing anyone to find fault with selected an example from a much earlier time, it might have been said that he was counting on the shortness of men's memories. Hence he takes a recent instance. For πρὸς

6. ἔφθασας] ‘you have come.’ The idea of anticipation had already disappeared from this verb in the N.T.: cp. also Mason Five Orations Index III s.v.

10. στάδιον] ‘arena’: lit. ‘race course.’

13. πολὺ μέρος κτλ.] ‘could contribute largely to this end.’

18. παρὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν] ‘at the outset’: cp. ii 7 τὰ μὲν παρὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν λεγόμενα.

21. σκιαμαχίαν] (‘fight with a shadow’), i.e. ‘mock-fight.’

VII. Basil had said that Chrys., by his withdrawal, cast a slur upon those who recommended him for consecration. Chrys. replies that, properly considered, his action deserves praise, not blame, from such persons. For if he had yielded to their wishes, his weak points would speedily have been found out, to the discomfiture of all who had supported him.

5. ἦν] a cognate accusative: cp. on i 4 (φυγεῖν τὴν φυγήν).

11. ἀνακειμένους] ‘consecrated’: ἀνακειμαι is used as the passive of ἀνατίθημι (whence ἀνάθημα, ‘offering’).

14. οὐδὲ μέχρι ἐνν.] ‘not even in thought’: cp. οὐκ ἐστη μέχρι τοῦτον ii 1 (note).

17. ψηφίσασθαι τ. κ.] If these words are genuine (and they are found in all MSS known to me), they serve to explain τοῦτο. ‘I came (was brought) to this, viz. to vote for (side with) my accusers.’ It has been suggested that they are an interpolation, and that the true explanation of τοῦτο is τὸ διαφυγεῖν τὴν ἱερωσύνην (to be supplied from the context): cp. iv 2 τοὺς μὲν ἐλομένους εἰκὼν ὑπὸ δόξης ψευδῶς ἀτατηθέντας ἐπὶ τοῦτο ἐλθεῖν, i.e. ἐπὶ τὸ ἐλέσθαις ἐλθεῖν. On the other hand ψηφίσασθαι is not a very likely word for an interpolator to use: so I make no change.

18. τῶν τὰ μ. ἥδ.] ‘I should be one of the greatest offenders.’

20. τοὺς μηδὲν ἥδ.] If with one MS we omit μηδέν, the climax in τοὺς ἡδικ...τοὺς τιμ. προελ. ἀφ' εαυτῶν is more strongly marked: but we should then have expected καὶ τοὺς ἥδ. ‘even those who have wronged us.’

1. τοὺς τ. προελ.] accus. with ἀμειβεσθαι. The order of the words is πόσης...ἄξιον, [τὸ] τοὺς ἐναντίους ἀμειβ. τοὺς τιμ. προελ. ἀφ. ἐ. There seems to be no MS authority for the words πῶς τιμῶν χρῆ, added in the vulgate text after ἀφ' εαυτῶν. Note the contrast between κολάσεως and τιμωρίας. κόλασις = 'punishment' as correction, to check the further growth of the evil: τιμωρία = 'punishment' as retribution for a past offence: see Hort-Mayor, Index to Clem. Alex. Stromateis vii (s.v. τιμωρία). Cp. iii 17 below κόλασις αἰώνιον τοῦ μλούσιον δίδωσι τὴν τιμωρίαν (note).

I. Those who accuse Chrysostom of arrogance because he rejected the proffered honour shew by so doing that they themselves fail to appreciate that honour at its true value: otherwise they would have seen that no one could possibly reject it unless for the strongest of reasons, viz. a feeling of personal unworthiness.

I. τῆς ὕβρ. ἔνεκεν] 'as for the (alleged) insolence.'

IV. The majesty of the High Priest under the old dispensation is as nothing when compared with that of the Christian Priest, above all at the time when he is celebrating the Holy Eucharist.

For the doctrine of Chrys. with regard to the Eucharist see Bp Cosin Transubstantiation c. vi art. 8 (Engl. Translation of 1679, pp. 109 sq.); Pusey Presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist pp. 543—597, Brightman Eastern and Western Liturgies vol. i Appendix C, pp. 475—481: see also Introd. p. xviii.

2. τάξιν κτλ.] ‘ranks among things celestial.’

5. ἀκολούθιαν] ‘the order’ of the priesthood.

6. φαντάξεσθαι] ‘to represent.’

9. φρικωδέστατα] After the positive φοβερά we might have expected φρικώδη: but cp. iii 15 ἄγια καὶ φρικωδέστατα, vi 13 ἄγια πολεμωτάτους (note): also Mason Five Orations Index III s.v. ῥάστος.

ib. τὰ πρὸ τῆς χ.] χάρις is sometimes used, as here, to denote the new dispensation, κανὴ διαθῆκη; cp. in

S. Barlaamum martyrem 686 D el δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθῆκης ταῦτα ἀπηγρέυεται, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐπὶ τῆς χάριτος. This use is probably derived from Jn i 17 ὁ νόμος διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐδόθη, ἡ χάρις καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐγένετο.

10. οἱ κώδωνες κτλ.] See the description of the dress of the High Priest in Ex. xxviii. Κώδωνες are the ‘bells’ (72 in number) on the hem of his upper-garment: ρόσκοι = ‘pomegranates,’ also on the hem (I.c. vv. 33, 34): λίθοι οἱ τ. στ.= the twelve stones in the breastplate, inscribed with the names of the twelve tribes (vv. 17—21), but according to others the Urim and Thummim (v. 30): οἱ τῆς ἐπ., sc. λίθοι, = the stones on the shoulder-pieces (vv. 6—12): ἡ μίτρα ‘the mitre,’ and ἡ κίδαρις ‘the diadem,’ which with the ‘sacred crown’ (τὸ πέταλον below) composed the High Priest’s head-dress (vv. 36—38): ποδήρης (tunica talaris)=the robe reaching to the ground (v. 31). See Hastings’ DB art. ‘Priests and Levites,’ ‘Crown,’ ‘Mitre,’ etc., and literature there quoted.

3. λεχθέν] 2 Cor. iii. 10.

5. δταν γάρ κτλ.] This passage is of great importance as illustrating Chrysostom's conception of the Eucharist. While Gregory of Nyssa had taught a qualitative unity between the Eucharistic elements and the body of our Lord, Chrys. goes further, and speaks of a complete identity between them. See Harnack History of Dogma vol. iv (Engl. Translation) p. 297, Greg. Nyss. Or. Cat. (ed. Strawley) p. xl. This view was afterwards perfected by John of Damascus (Harnack op. cit. iv p. 301), and remains the doctrine of the Eucharist in the Greek Church to the present day. Cp. Joh. Damasc. de fide orth. iv 13 οὐκ ἔστι τύπος ὁ δρός καὶ ὁ οἶνος τοῦ σώματος καὶ αἷματος Χριστοῦ (μὴ γένοιτο) ἀλλ' αὐτὸ τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Κυρίου τεθεωμένον. See also Introd. p. xviii.

7. πάντας ἐκείνῳ κτλ.] This implies that the cup was (as it still is) in the East given to the laity (hence πάντας); Brightman op. cit. i. p. 479.

ib. φοινισκ.] Perhaps there is an allusion to the custom of applying the finger to the moistened lip after receiving the cup, and of touching the breast, eyes, and ears.

9. πᾶσαν σαρκ. διάν.] Cp. Liturgy of St James (Brightman, p. 41) and Liturgy of St Chrysostom (ibid. p. 377).

10. γυμνῷ] 'naked': i.e. free from the integuments of the body.

16. διὰ τῶν ὀφθ. τότε] Some MSS (see critical note) substitute τῆς πιστεως for τότε: but Chrys. (as Harnack has said) agrees with Gregory of Nyssa in the assumption of an essentially corporeal effect of the participation in the sacred elements.

ib. καθάπτεσθαι] 'to rebuke' (with gen.), a classical use: Thuc. vi 16 ἐπειδὴ μον Νικιας καθῆφατο.

X. The priesthood as a whole cannot in fairness be reproached with the unworthiness of individual priests. These should, however, be chosen with the greatest possible care. Especially is this true of bishops: for if they are unfitted for their responsible duties, the consequences to the whole Church will be grave indeed.

13. φόνων κτλ.] The allusion may be to the struggle for the Bishopric of Rome in the year 367 between Damasus and Ursicinus. In one of the Roman basilicas 137 dead bodies were found after an affray which took place during these riots: Amm. Marcell. xxvii 3. But more probably Chrys. is thinking of the scenes of violence witnessed during the Arian controversy: Socr. iv 15. Τὰς ἐκκλησίας is here used of the sacred buildings: Suicer s.v.

17. τὴν ἀρχὴν] 'at first': cp. ii 4 πάλιν ἀγαγεῖν ὅθεν ἔξεπεσε τὴν ἀρχὴν. Some MSS read τῆς ἀρχῆς, 'of the office,' and αὐτῇ which follows is thought to favour that reading. Αὐτῷ, however, can quite as readily be referred to the τῆς ἀρχῆς which follows μαχόμενοι.

19. καθαλρ. κτλ.] 'a sin sufficient to bring about deposition.'

20. προλαβ. ἐκβ. ἐ.] Cp. the case of Gregory of Nazianzus, who voluntarily relinquished the Bishopric of Constantinople in 381. For the contrast in περιμένειν and προλαβόντα (= 'beforehand,' as at iv 1), cp. de virgin. 277 Ε οὐδὲ ἀν τὴν ἐκεῖνων περιμένει προθυμίαν, ἀλλὰ προλαβώντα αὐτὸς ἀν εἰσηγήσατο.

XI. A bishop need not grieve if he is deposed from his office by unfair means. His reward hereafter will be proportionately great. He must in every way guard against ambition, which Chrys. admits to be his own besetting sin, not to be overcome except by flight.

15. ἐπὶ ταύτης δεικ.] ‘to gain fame in this position of authority.’ This version seems better than ‘to be appointed to (over) this position,’ for this would require ἀποδειχθῆναι rather than the simple verb.

25. οἰκονομίαν] ‘office’: cp. οἰκονομίαν i 5 (note).

XIV. A passionate temper is a grave fault in a bishop: and, in general, the weaknesses of those in high places are a bad example to others, who are ready to imitate the faults of their superiors.

3. al τ. πρόξ. τ. τ.] ‘which bestow this honour’: cp. προξενεῖς iii 11 (note). The reference is thought by some to be to the election of a bishop, and the words τὸν λαχόντα τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν are taken (as by Stephens) to mean ‘the man who has won the prelacy,’ i.e. recently. But at vi 8 τὸν λαχόντα τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν is used simply as ‘the bishop,’ without any hint of a recent election: cp. iv 9 τὸν διδάσκειν τὸν διδόντα λαχόντα. It seems, moreover, from the words ἐν als μάλιστα κτλ. above, that the reference is more general: viz. to the filling up by the bishop and the πρεσβύτεροι, acting in conjunction, of responsible posts in the Church.

6. παρὰ τῶν ἔχθ. ηγτ.] ‘has come over from the enemy,’ i.e. from paganism, or (as suggested to me by the present Bishop of Exeter) from the Arians (τῶν ἐναντίων in § 278 = the party of Paulinus). Αὐτομολεῖν in late Greek is often simply = ‘to come’; cp. Greg. Nyss. Or. Cat. 22 (p. 85 Srawley).

20. τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ὄντων] 'the number of existing (bishops):' cp.

τῆς οδησης (sc. ἀθυμίας) τὸ πλέον iii. 16. The vetus interpres likewise renders the words by 'multitudinem clericorum.' Some editors, however (e.g. Hughes, Leo), translate: 'the abundance of his resources' (opum copiam). This can hardly be right. Wealth may indeed procure the preferment of some unworthy person (see the beginning of this chapter): but it can scarcely be also adduced as a reason for rejecting one who was otherwise suitable.

23. τῶν χηρῶν] These were the widows regularly maintained at the expense of the Church (cp. 1 Tim. v 16); their names were entered on a list kept for that purpose (see ἔγγραφεσθαι below).

In Antioch, where there were about 100,000 Christians, the widows and virgins together numbered 3000:

empowered bishops to act as arbitrators in disputes referred to them by the consent of both parties. To this was subsequently added the power of deciding civil suits: Soz. i 9. The impulse in this direction came originally from St Paul: see 1 Cor. vi 4, where the practice of bringing disputes before heathen judges is condemned. Bingham devotes a chapter to the subject, Origg. Eccles. ii vii: see also DCA 'Appeals.'

16. Σαβελλίου] This passage seems to be modelled on Greg. Naz.

de fuga cxxxvii. On Sabellius see Gwatkin Arian Controversy p. 9. S. 'had reduced the Trinity to three successive manifestations of the one God in the Law, the Gospel, and the Church.' His doctrines were condemned by a Council held at Rome in 263.

17. Ἀρείου] See Gibbon c. xxi; Gwatkin op. cit., and Studies of Arianism. Arius (whose doctrines were condemned at the Council of Nicaea in 325) held that our Lord Jesus Christ had a beginning of existence, and was not of the very substance of the Supreme God. For the subsequent attitude of Chrys. towards the Arians, who were powerful at Constantinople, see Puech p. 205.

VI. St Paul was not (as is sometimes thought) indifferent to the power of the spoken word. On the contrary, he developed this power assiduously in his own case, with splendid results to the Church.

The encomium pronounced on St Paul in this and in the following chapter may have been suggested by Greg. Naz. de fuga lii—lvi. In many other passages, however, Chrys. manifests the admiration which he felt for St Paul: see the references in the Index Rerum of the Benedictine edition.

6. εἰ...ἀπήγονυ] 'if I demanded': St Paul's admission that he was 'rude in speech' cannot properly be pressed save by those who expect from him the varied excellences of the great classical writers. It will be disregarded by those who set less value upon mere style.

ib. λειτητα κτλ.] Chrys. no doubt studied these authors while he was a pupil of Libanius. Λειτητ. = 'smoothness,' 'polish,' shewn for example in the avoidance of hiatus between vowels (φωνήντων σύγκρουσις): δύκον = 'weight': σεμνότ. = 'dignity': ὑψος = 'sublimity.' It may be observed that Suidas (s.v. Ιωάννης) attributes ὑψος and λειότης to the present treatise, de sac.

11. ἀπαγγ.] 'style,' 'expression.'

12. τῇ λέξει πτ.] 'to have a poor (lit. beggarly) style': cp. Greg. Naz. de se ipso et in episc. 301 sqq., where it is maintained that simplicity is preferable to the elaborate style of Chrysippus, Plato, and others.

VII. Instances are quoted to shew the efficacy of St Paul's eloquence in converting souls to Christ.

8. τῇς ἐν τ. λ. δυν.] ‘the force of eloquence,’ implying florid rhetoric: cp. v 2 διδασκαλίαν τὴν ἐν χάριτι κτλ.

II., III. He must at the same time cultivate his powers of speech to the utmost; and observe the golden mean between love of praise and contempt for it.

11. ἐν χάριτι κτλ.] Cp. Col. iv 6, quoted in iv 8 above.

14. κρότων] For the practice of applauding a favourite preacher cp. Euseb. H. E. vii 30 9, Greg. Naz. Or. xlii: Cognet p. 46. A Greek congregation still cries Ὕπω on the not very frequent occasions when sermons are preached.

17. μελετῶντι] This goes with αὐτῷ. The intervening τοῖς πολλοῖς is disregarded.

18. μήτε πάσχ. κτλ.] ‘not affected by praise.’

1. τούτων] genitive of price: 'at such a cost.'

III. 6. ἐπιστῦψαι] 'to reprove': lit. 'to draw up,' 'contract' (used of astrigents).

12. εἰς ἀκρίβ. κτλ.] 'to have reached perfection in regard to both these virtues.' The charioteer has two horses, and knows how to make them pull evenly.

14. καὶ γὰρ θταν κτλ.] Cp. Greg. Naz. de se ipso et in episc. 775, where stress is laid, as here, on the personal character of the priest.

16. ἀνιέναι] 'to forgive.'

V. The gifted preacher ought not to allow himself to grow careless in the preparation of his sermons. More is expected of him than of others: and his faults will accordingly be scrutinized with all the greater severity.

23. μᾶλλον...μείζων] Note the double comparative: cp. Blass Gr. N.T. 44 (5).

APPENDIX.

THE BEARING OF THE SCRIPTURAL QUOTATIONS IN THE DE SACERDOTIO ON THE TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The quotations in Chrysostom's writings attest the 'Syrian' or 'a' type of text. It is admitted by all critics of the text of the New Testament that the quotations in the writings of St Chrysostom are derived from a text substantially identical with that represented by the 'Syrian' group of authorities. Dr Hort wrote¹: "a glance at any tolerably complete apparatus criticus of the Acts or Pauline Epistles reveals the striking fact that an overwhelming proportion of the variants common to the great mass of cursive and late uncial Greek MSS. are identical with the readings followed by Chrysostom in the composition of his Homilies. The coincidence furnishes evidence as to place as well as time; for the whole of Chrysostom's life, the last ten years excepted, was spent at Antioch or in its neighbourhood." From the abundant quotations in the voluminous works of St Chrysostom, and in the fragments of Theodore of Antioch and Mopsuestia, and of Diodorus of Antioch and Tarsus², Dr Hort concluded that "the fundamental text of late extant Greek MSS. generally is beyond all question identical with the dominant Antiochian or Graeco-Syrian text of the second half of the fourth century³."

A study of the quotations in the de sacerdotio corroborates the general conclusion of Dr Hort. They are taken from a 'Syrian' type of text, as we might have expected, on à priori grounds, in a genuine writing of St Chrysostom.

² See de sac. i. 1 (notes on φίλοι and διδασκάλοις).

³ Introduction to N.T., p. 92.

Most of the biblical references in the de sacerdotio (for which see Index II.) merely contain allusions to passages of Scripture without quoting the exact words. They are thus of no value for the purpose of textual criticism. Of the remaining passages the following seem to be the most serviceable for that purpose.

I. Examples of Syrian readings.

1. 2 Cor. xi. 3 (see p. 58, 18 and note).

φοβοῦμαι γάρ, φησιν, μή πως, ως ὁ ὄφις Εὐαν ἐξηπάτησεν, οὗτῳ φθαρῇ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπλότητος τῆς εἰς τὸν Χριστόν.

Here we note the following points :

(a) The omission of the words ἐν τῇ πανουργίᾳ αὐτοῦ after ἐξηπάτησεν seems peculiar to Chrysostom.

(b) οὗτῳ is a Syrian reading, attested e.g. by K M Thdrt. It is omitted by NBD.

(c) ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπλότητος τούτου is Syrian. It is attested by K M Thdrt, and omitted by NBD.

2. Eph. vi. 12 (see p. 30, 6 and note).

οὐκ ἔπιν ήμιν ἡ πάλη πρὸς αἷμα καὶ σάρκα, ἀλλὰ...πρὸς τοὺς κοσμοκράτορας τοῦ σκότους τοῦ αἰώνος τούτου.

The addition of τοῦ αἰώνος is Syrian (K Thdrt). The words are omitted by NBD.

3. 2 Tim. ii. 25 (see p. 36, 1 and note).

μήποτε δῷ αὐτοῖς ὁ θεὸς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας, καὶ ἀπαλλαγῶσι τῆς τοῦ διαβόλου παγίδος.

The form δῷ is found in K : δώῃ in NACD.

The reading ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας καὶ ἀπαλλαγῶσι κτλ. for μετάνοιαν εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας καὶ ἀνανήψωσιν ἐκ κτλ. seems to be otherwise unattested.

II. Examples of Western readings.

Jn iii. 5 (see p. 55, 14 and note).

εἰ γὰρ οὐ δύναται τις εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, ἔλαν μὴ δὶς ὄντας καὶ πνεύματος ἀναγεννηθῆ κτλ.

The readings (a) τῶν οὐρανῶν for τοῦ θεοῦ, and (b) ἀναγεννηθῆ for γεννηθῆ, are Western : see Westcott and Hort Notes on Select Readings, p. 75 (in Introduction to N.T.).

III. New readings, apparently due to Chrysostom's practice of quoting from memory.

(a) Matt. xxiv. 45 (p. 27, 20 and note).

τίς ἄρα ὁ πιστὸς δοῦλος καὶ φρόνιμος διν καταστήσει ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτοῦ; ἐπὶ τὴν οἰκίαν is otherwise unattested, though ἐπὶ τῆς οἰκίας is not without authority.

(b) Jn xv. 24 (p. 102, 14 and note).

εἰ μὴ τὰ σημεῖα ἐποίουν ἐν αὐτοῖς ἀ μηδεὶς ἄλλος ἐποίησεν, ἀμαρτίαν οὐκ εἶχον.

There seems to be no other evidence than that of Chrysostom for the reading σημεῖα.

(c) 1 Cor. ii. 11 (p. 31, 23 and note).

οὐδεὶς γάρ οἴδε τὰ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, εἰ μὴ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ.

If this be a quotation from, and not merely a paraphrase of Scripture, the reading οὐδεὶς γάρ for τίς γάρ must be noted as having no other support.

The number of quotations from the New Testament which are Evidence on a to be found in the de sacerdotio and which furnish larger scale material for the purpose in hand is thus not large : from the Homilies of and to deal fully with the question of Chrysostom's Chrysostom. text of the New Testament it would be necessary to travel considerably beyond the present treatise, and to examine his many other writings, especially his Homilies on St Matthew and on the Pauline Epistles. This is, strictly speaking, somewhat beyond the scope of the present Appendix ; but it may be of interest to refer to the results of the most recent research into the wider question of which this Appendix forms a part, viz. the text of the N.T. as it appears in Chrysostom's writings. The evidence has been recently collected by Dr S. K. Gifford¹, and his conclusions may be stated as follows²:

1. Chrysostom often has readings which are peculiar to himself.

2. He has several readings common to him and to the most ancient authorities, especially MSS. of the Western type.

3. He knew and approved many readings which are also found in N^c and D^{bc}, and (among later MSS.) KL.

The following observations (a) and (b) refer to (1) and (2) of these conclusions respectively.

¹ In a dissertation, published in the Dissertationes philologicae Halenses, vol. 16, pt 1 (1902), and entitled, 'Pauli Epistolae qua forma legerit Joannes Chrysostomus.'

² Gifford op. cit., p. 77.

(a) If Chrysostom has readings which are not found elsewhere, the explanation of this may be sought in the fact that Chrysostom, as is natural with a preacher, often quotes from memory, even in his written treatises. See examples from the de sac. under III. above.

(b) A more important question is raised by Dr Gifford's second conclusion; viz. the question of the date of the 'Syrian' recension. Dr Chase has said¹: "Chrysostom's comparative silence on the subject of variations of reading seems to be an indication that he regarded the question of text as authoritatively settled." From this he infers that the Antiochian text was regarded as in a manner final, and that discussion was regarded as needless.

On the other hand Dr Chase also refers to certain survivals of curious pre-Syrian readings, and sometimes of early traditional readings, oftener Western: and we have seen that Dr Gifford has adduced fresh evidence to the same effect. It therefore seems unsafe to conclude that the 'Syrian' recension had already taken place in Chrysostom's lifetime². Dr Gifford seems, according to the evidence which he has himself collected, to be nearer the truth when he places the 'Syrian' recension somewhat later, and certainly not before the end of the fourth century³.

² As is assumed, for example, by Dr J. O. F. Murray, in Hastings' DB (Extra Volume, p. 213): "the Traditional Text was in existence in substantially its present form by the middle of the fourth century." The Traditional Text is the same as that which Dr Hort calls Syrian, and Chrysostom is its best representative (ibid., pp. 212–3).

³ Gifford op. cit., p. 69: collendum est in Oriente, saeculo quarto exeunte, multis locis Novi Testamenti nullo modo certam lectionem fuisse, sed variantes lectiones exstisisse non paucas. Licebat igitur episcopo et doctori qualis erat Chrysostomus ex dubiis ipsi eligere, neque ullum vestigium percipimus auctoritatis certae et constitutae ad quam applicare se oporteat, sed sententia loci solus est discrepantiarum arbiter. Dr Gifford also refers with approval to Nestle, who remarks (Einf. N.T., p. 121) that the same writer would not always have the same copy of the Bible before him.
